Sen. Robinson Laid to Rest In Rainstorm At Little Rock

Friends Stand in Deluge to See Democratic Leader Buried.

All Classes Crowd Route of Funeral

Thunder's Crash Recalls Political Furore of Last Days.

Little Rock, Ark., July 18.—In a torrential cloudburst, Senator Joseph Taylor Robinson today was laid to final rest under the spreading boughs of four oak trees in beautiful Oak Lawn Cemetery here as the representatives of the Nation looked on with bowed heads.

His long funeral journey from the Nation's Capitol to his home here, to the State Capitol, to the First Methodist Church and then on to the cemetery came to an end under black clouds, roaring thunder and flashing lightning, just as his life ended amid the turbulence of the bitterest political controversy in decades.

A deluge of water commenced to fall just as the flag-draped coffin reached the edge of the grave. Hundreds of the spectators rushed for the shelter of automobiles, trees and nearby tents. But a large group of friends, though drenched to the skin, remained standing faithfully until the body had been lowered into the earth and the final word of benediction said.

Baruch Among Faithful.

There stood the stately, patriarchial Bernard M. Baruch, financier, hunting companion and close friend of Joe Robinson, the rain lashing his face. He had canceled a trip to Europe to pay tribute to his Senatorial friend and he remained to the end.

There also stood Vice President John N. Garner, his browned hand brushing away the water which streamed down his face.

And there in the white full dress of the Army and Navy, now wet and sticking to their bodies, were Col. Edwin M. Watson and Capt. Paul Bastedo, White House military and Naval aides, representing the President to the end.

Also caught in the downpour of rain as they grieved at Joe Robinson's grave were Postmaster General James A. Farley, former Vice President Charles G. Dawes, former Secretary of War Patrick J. Hurley, former Senator and now Circuit Judge Sam G. Bratton, of New Mexico, Govs. Carl Bailey of Arkansas and Richard Leche of Louisiana and a large part of the Senate and the House.

Farm Hand Devoted.

Others less well known stood throughout that rain, which fell in sheets. But none showed a greater love and devotion to the dead Democratic chieftain than the 72-year-old colored farm hand, Dave Stewart. With a small bouquet of field flowers in his hand, he met the Robinson funeral train as it arrived here early today. He walked behind the coffin to the Robinson home, and when he was permitted—among the first—to look on the face of the dead Senator big tears rolled down his cheeks.

Fifty years ago, Stewart, then a strong, strapping young man, had worked on the farm of Joe Robinson's father near Lonoke, Ark., a short distance from here. Young Joe Robinson, also strong and strapping, had helped him plow the fields of the farm. Ever since, he had watched his young companion of the plow forge his way upward in the political councils of the Nation.

Although he understood little, old Dave Stewart knew that Joe Robinson had become a great man. But what was more, he remained the friend of the old colored man, and Dave Stewart came today to pay tribute in the only way possible for him.

Colored Mourners Many.

In the South the stature and character of a white man frequently can be measured, it is said, by whether the colored folk like him, or whether they shrink away from him. If that is an accurate test, then Joe Robinson was a good and kindly man as well as a great political figure, for literally thousands of Dave Stewart's race stood waiting for hours to get a last fleeting glimpse of his face as his body lay in state in the rotunda of the Arkansas Capitol, or they stood along the route of his funeral cortege to see it pass.

"Joe Robinson was a Nigger's

Police Vainly Hunt Slayer in Throng At Doctor's Rites

Providence, R. I., July 18 (AP).—Moving somberly but alertly among 300 mourners, crack detectives watched the funeral of Dr. George W. Webster today, hopeful that the 39-year-old society obstetrician's slayer would attend and establish his or her presence in some emotional betrayal.

But as the surgeon was lowered into his grave at Swan Point Cemetery, the identity of the person who fired the two .45-caliber slugs into his body at close range last Friday appeared as much a mystery as ever.

By the Associated Press.

Lansing, Ia., July 18.—Dr. Jean Piccard's first flight in his novel craft buoyed by multiple balloons terminated in a hazardous tree-top landing early today.

The gondola of the Pleiades, first sounding balloon lifting craft ever to carry a man aloft, burst into flames a moment after Dr. Piccard crept from it and climbed down a tree in an isolated valley 9 miles from this northeastern Iowa village.

The scientist said he believed the fire, which melted the metal of the gondonla and destroyed the instruments within, might have been caused by the TNT detonation by which he cut away the upper half of 95 4-foot balloons sustaining the gondola.

Dr. Piccard came down six hours after he took off, at 12:08 a. m., Central standard time,, from Rochester, Minn., 110 miles to the northeast.

Notwithstanding the misfortune, the balloonist termed his flight, an experiment looking toward an ascension into the stratosphere, "beautiful" and said he had learned much from it. He sought to determine the feasibility of using a large number of balloons instead of a single large one.

Asked about the possibility of a considered stratosphere flight with 2,000 such balloons, Dr. Picard said it probably would be attempted if last night's experiment were proved sufficiently successful.

"Wait until I digest the results," he said.

After reaching a maximum height of 11,000 feet, Dr. Piccard related that he descended into the valley to avoid the Mississippi River, which lay more than a mile and a half ahead of him.

The multi-balloon craft came down on land owned by Mort Madden, a farmer, who busy with his 6 o'clock milking, observed two clusters of what, in his eyes, resembled golf balls floating over the trees in the distance.

Uninformed of the Piccard flight, Madden said he thought little of the sight until about an hour later. A man with flowing gray hair, clad

Talks on Train May Determine Court Bill Fate

Garner Takes Charge of Party Returning From Arkansas.

By a Staff Correspondent.

Aboard the Senate Special, En Route from Robinson Funeral to Washington, July 18.—The fate of President Roosevelt's Supreme Court program and the Democratic leadership fight in all probability will be determined in a series of conferences which will take place on this train tonight and tomorrow.

These conferences commenced as soon as the group of high ranking officials who escorted Senator Joseph T. Robinson's body to its final resting place returned to the train late today. Whatever restraint on political discussion and maneuvering that was imposed by the presence of the dead leader's body was gone tonight.

Garner Takes Charge.

Symbolic of the seriousness of the undertakings commenced as the train rolled out of Little Rock at 7 p. m. Central time tonight was the fact that Vice President John N. Garner, in the private car used by the Robinson family on the trip out, took off his shirt and got down to business.

"Jack" Garner, returning to Washington, has again taken charge of the Senate. Throughout the early evening a steady stream of Senators visited his car and undoubtedly there will be many more such meetings tomorrow. As far as could be learned, Garner tonight was intent on exploring the disturbed situation in the Senate which has developed since his departure from Washington five weeks ago.

The Vice President, it was understood, had not taken sides in the leadership fight nor had he undertaken to project any compromises on the court bill. But all

Catholics Called To Lead Nation In Labor Peace

Cardinal Gibbons' Ideas Invoked at Observance of 103d Birthday.

Catholic employers of America were called upon yesterday to lead the way to industrial harmony in this country "through application of the Christian labor principles enunciated so clearly and so often by an immortal American—James Cardinal Gibbons."

At memorial exercises held in observance of the 103d anniversary of the birth of the great churchman, Dr. John R. Fitzpatrick, dean of the law school of Columbus University, termed Cardinal Gibbons "one of the greatest friends labor ever had."

The exercises were held before the statue of the famed Maryland citizen and prelate, at Sixteenth street and Park road, in front of Sacred Heart Church, and were under auspices of the Knights of Columbus.

Through their national representatives, 20,000,000 Catholics joined in the ceremonies. Dr. Fitzpatrick's address was broadcast over a Nation-wide radio hookup in which 77 stations participated.

Advice to Employers.

Twenty-seven societies and the State of Maryland presented memorial wreaths.

Employers who would lead the way to industrial peace and thus stamp out communism, Dr. Fitzpatrick said, must "'abolish sweatshops, boost wages wherever possible, shorten the work week and thus create thousands of additional jobs, and above all else follow the mandate of the Congress—live up to the letter and spirit of the Wagner labor relations act."

"Prove your good intentions," he urged, "by signing contracts with your workers."

Terming the Wagner act "one of the greatest weapons ever devised

China Guilty Of 'Invasion,' Japan Asserts

New Aggression Charged in Troop Concentration in 'Forbidden' Zone.

Tokyo Cites Agreement Which Nanking Holds Is Invalid.

By the Associated Press.

Tokyo, (Monday) July 19.—The Japanese government announced officially today heavy concentrations of Chinese troops had been made near Peiping constituting a direct act of aggression against Japan.

The movement of troops into crisis-torn Hopeh Province, scene of more than a week of intermittent fighting between Japanese and Chinese troops, was said by the government to constitute a violation of the 2-year-old Ho-Umezu agreement.

The agreement was signed in 1935 between Gen. Ho Ying-chin, Chinese minister of war and then head of the North China government, and Gen. Yoshijiri Umezu, then commander of the Japanese North China garrison.

Terms of the agreement have never been made public and the Nanking government does not accept it as valid. The Japanese army, which has the power to enforce its alleged terms, has asserted it contains a Chinese pledge not to send troops of the Nanking government into North China.

The war office announced that the "invasion" of Hopeh Province, southern part of the semiautonomous jurisdiction of the Chahar-Hopeh political council, was made by the Thirty-second and Fifty-eighth Chinese divisions.

Chinese military authorities were reported here to be strengthening feverishly Peiping's fortifications. The majority of Japanese civilians and thousands of Chinese were said to have already evacuated the ancient capital of China.

Japanese officials discounted reports from Tientsin, headquarters of the Japanese army in north China, that Chinese local officials had agreed to the demands of the Japanese army to settle the grave crisis in Sino-Japanese affairs.

Chinese Retreating.

By the Associated Press.

Peiping, China (Monday), July 19. The Chinese Twenty-ninth Route Army prepared today to retreat southward from Yungting River positions through Changhsintien, three miles southwest of Peiping, after reports from Tientsin said a peaceful settlement of the North China crisis had been reached.

Four thousand Chinese troops were hastily repairing roadways and 6,000 Chinese civilians were evacuated.

Foreign observers expressed the opinion Chinese resistance to Japanese demands in the North China trouble was broken after learning from Tientsin that Japanese officials and Gen. Sun Cheh-yuan, chairman of the Hopeh-Chahar political council and commander of the Twenty-ninth Army, had reached an agreement.

The Chinese general was reported to have agreed to withdraw Chinese troops in the area west of Peiping, apologize for the Wanpinghsien incident of July 7 in which troops of the Twenty-ninth Army clashed with Japanese, punishment of those responsible for the incident and suppression of anti-Japanese movements and communism.

Troop Trains Attacked.

Only a few reconnaisance officers, not from the Twenty-ninth Central government armies, were found in Changhsintien and there was no indication that new Central Government troops would arrive.

Chinese reports said three Chinese troop trains in Honan and Hopeh Provinces were attacked by Japanese planes, machine-gunners killing two Chinese and wounding 20 others.

Chinese guards on the walls of Wangpinghsien and Japanese troops in the vicinity of the city exchanged rifle fire for several hours yesterday after the settlement was reached.

Foreigners who visited the region today reported highways in the vicinity of Wangpinghsien were mined and big barricades had been erected, the little walled city apparently fearing a Japanese attack.

Verbal Truce Made.

Tientsin, July 18 (AP).—Japanese officials said today the ranking Chinese officials in the north had

Girl, 3, Run Down as Father Pushes Auto From Garage

Her life hanging in the balance, Charlotte Harman, 3, was in Casualty Hospital last night, victim of one of the year's oddest accidents.

The child's father, Charles Harman, sr., told the story of how his daughter was hurt, in what hospital attendants fear will be a fatal accident. She was run over by an automobile being pushed.

"I went out into the garage Sunday morning," he said, his eyes wandering from the child's bed in the children's ward.

"I was planning to sweep out the garage. The youngsters, Charles and Charlotte, they're twins, were playing on the back lawn. I went around one side of the car. Instead of starting the motor, I gave the machine a push out onto the driveway.

"Charles called out 'Charlotte's been hurt.' I ran around to the other side of the car. She was just getting to her feet. She didn't say anything, she didn't cry or utter a sound. I picked her up and asked her what had happened. Then she collapsed in my arms.

"The boy told me he had seen the car start to move and he'd run and jumped on the running board. I guess she tried to do the same thing, but nobody saw just what happened. Anyway she was brave as a little soldier and never whimpered or cried."

The Bladensburg Rescue Squad took the child and rushed the now unconscious baby in an ambulance to the hospital, the father riding with her.

A building foreman in Washington, Harman, sr., could hardly comprehend the swift tragedy which had come to his baby at his own hands. Dr. Charles C. Hageage, of Mount Rainier told the family not to leave the hospital. The mother and relatives waited through endless hours yesterday and last night, for a glimmer of hope the child would live. They live on Edmonston road, East Riverdale, Md.

One Dies, 8 Rescued in Leap From Blazing Potomac Boat

Wrecked Boat and Three of the Survivors

Gas Explosion Turns Gay Outing Into Tragedy.

Motorists Watch As Victim Dies

Body Not Recovered; Father Saves Child of Four.

A gay outing on the Potomac River ended yesterday afternoon when a 30-foot cruiser caught fire, one man was drowned and eight other persons—including a 4-year-old girl—leaped into the water and were rescued.

The tragedy, growing out of the explosion of a gas tank, happened in that stretch of the Potomac about midway between Hains Point and the Highway Bridge, and was witnessed by thousands who ran from automobiles to line the seawall, thus causing a traffic jam of Cherry Blossom proportions.

Woodrow G. Cronk, 25, of 4603 Illinois avenue, was drowned. Unable to swim, he was the last to jump from the flaming launch.

Those rescued by other launches, with two exceptions, all lived at the Illinois avenue address. They were:

Thomas C. Hollowell, 58, an employe of the Capital Transit Co.; Mrs. Cora L. Hollowell, 54, his wife; Wilmer Dennis Hollowell, 30, a son; Robert Logan Hollowell, 33, another son; the latter's 4-year-old daughter, Mary Ellen Hollowell; Miss Charlsie Heritage, 21; William Cook, Hampton Courts, 2013 New Hampshire avenue, the operator; Miss Edna Heritage, Winston-Salem, N. C., a sister of Charlsie.

Returning From Alexandria.

The Hollowells and their friends had been down the Potomac River as far as Alexandria. On the way back, the boat was stopped at the Naval Air Station to take on gasoline. The gas tank exploded a half hour or so later—about 4:30 p. m.—and the explosion hurled Cook, who was steering, into the water.

Thomas Hollowell was just above the gas tank, but somehow managed to escape injury. Running around the flames, he reached the side of his wife, Cora, who can't swim.

Robert Hollowell snatched up his little daughter, Mary Ellen, and all aboard moved out to edges of the deck.

As the heat became unbearable, they began jumping, the elder Hollowell with his wife, Robert with his daughter, the Misses Heritage, and Wilmer Hallowell.

Wilmer, before jumping, managed to snatch a life preserver and throw it to his brother, Robert, who held the child.

Spectators Horrified.

Finally all had jumped except Woodrow Cronk. He was torn between the dilemma of drowning or burning to death. Horrified spectators on shore could hear those on a nearby launch crying out to him, "Jump! Jump!"

In the end the 240-pound Capital Transit conductor did and was drowned.

Meantime, the others began swimming away from the blazing craft, as rescue cruisers hurried to the scene.

Thomas Hollowell said at his home last night that he was about exhausted when some men on a launch pulled him and his wife from the water.

"Cora was wonderful, Hollowell said of his wife. "I haven't done any swimming for seven or eight years and she has never been able to swim. But I asked her to do just as I told her. She was wonderful, just as calm as anything.

"My head was under the water most of the time and I was pretty much all in when we were picked up."

Logan Hollowell, towing his little daughter, also was on the verge of exhaustion despite the fact he had a life preserver.

Cruisers Aid Rescue.

Three cruisers picked up the members of the party and brought them ashore as the thrilled thousands on the seawall looked on.

Mrs. Mary Osbon, of Laurel, Md., and members of her family who were driving around the speedway, had seen the fire on the launch and a member of the party hurried to the Hains Point Tea House to give the alarm. Manager J. B. Stouffer telephoned the Park Police, who in

Rebels Launch Terrific Drive Against Madrid

160 Planes in Battle, 22 Are Shot Down; Tanks in Action.

By the Associated Press.

Madrid, July 18.—Insurgent air and ground forces smashed at government positions on the west front of Madrid today in a drive to regain lost territory.

One of the biggest air battles of the war was fought over the mountains 15 miles west of Madrid when squadrons of insurgent planes, bombing government trenches, encountered a strong force of government planes.

The government said 18 insurgent planes and 4 defending ships were shot down in the fight, which involved about 160 planes.

Insurgent ground troops, strongly reinforced by thousands of men rushed to the Brunete salient by Generalissimo Francisco Franco, launched an attack on government trenches after artillery shelled the defenders for two hours.

The government claimed this insurgent offensive was repulsed after fighting which lasted all afternoon.

The insurgent drive brought into

Navy Gives Up Earhart Hunt As Hopeless

By the Associated Press.

Honolulu, July 18.—The United States Navy gave Amelia Earhart up for dead at sunset today, when it announced an end to the vast South Seas hunt for the aviatrix and ordered the return of the giant aircraft carrier Lexington to its base in San Diego.

The carrier, which has sent its searching planes roaring vainly across Equatorial skies for nearly a week, was ordered to proceed directly to San Diego.

Three destroyers, also in the hunt for the aviatrix and her navigator, Frederick J. Noonan, will return to the Pacific Coast via Pearl Harbor, where they will refuel.

Two weeks ago Friday, the world-famous aviatrix and Noonan vanished on a 2,570-mile flight from Lae, New Guinea, to Equatorial Howland Island, a mere dot 2 feet above the sea.

The Lexington's 63 planes had flown 100,000 miles since the start of their hunt last Tuesday.

Week's Heat Wave Broken by Cooling Winds From North

Cool weather soothed Washington yesterday after a week of scorching temperatures, borne into the Capital on winds from Canada. The thermometer, which had been dancing above the 90's, dropped quietly back into the 70's.

Maximum for the day was 81 at 1 o'clock, the only time yesterday the mercury passed above the 80 line on the register. Low for the day came about 6 a. m., when 71, coolest in days, was touched.

Prospect for today, according to the Weather Bureau, is "fair with moderate temperatures." Light rains were expected yesterday evening, but skies remained unclouded.

The change in temperature which brought relief to millions all over Eastern United States was attributed to cool winds which descended from Canada, breaking the heat wave.

Quake Is Felt On Long Island

New York (Monday), July 19 (AP). Residents of Brooklyn and parts of Long Island reported disturbances that may have been the jar of a minor earthquake early today.

Newspaper offices received calls from many residents who inquired if there had been an explosion. Others inquired if there had been an earthquake.

Oliver O. Kuhn, D.C. Journalist, Is Dead at 51

Managing Editor of Star Succumbs in Hospital; Rites Tomorrow.

Oliver Owen Kuhn, 51, managing editor of the Washington Star and widely known newspaperman, died yesterday. He had been in poor health for some time and recently was taken to Emergency Hospital, where death occurred.

The journalist died at 8:02 yesterday morning, his wife and two daughters and a sister, Mrs. William T. Rose, being at his bedside. It was announced later in the day funeral services will be held at 4 o'clock tomorrow afternoon in the National City Christian Church, Thomas Circle. Burial will be in a vault in Rock Creek Cemetery. The body is at Joseph Gawler Sons, undertakers.

Physicians several days ago gave up hope of Mr. Kuhn's recovery. He had been suffering for some weeks from a general physical breakdown and July 9, when his condition suddenly became critical, he was taken to the hospital. Uremic poisoning and other complications developed and he grew steadily weaker.

Literally hundreds of friends in all walks of life were saddened by news of his death.

Native of Indiana.

Kuhn began a career which was to carry him to high position in his profession, in the little town of Hancock, Ind., where he was born February 28, 1886. His first job was a reporter on the Palladium, Richmond, Ind.

From the Palladium his course

Pilot Lands in Park After Engine Stalls

Baltimore, July 18 (AP).—G. B. Fenwick, jr., private pilot of Baltimore, brought his plane to a safe landing in a crowded city park here today after the motor stalled.

Fenwick was 2,500 feet up above the City Hall when the motor cut out. Hundreds of persons were playing or walking in the park as Fenwick brought the ship in for the forced landing.

Patrolman Bernard L. Tully, seeing the plane circling, ran through the park blowing his whistle and managed to clear the field before the plane landed. It was not damaged except for a dent in one wing which struck a lamp post.

August Meeting Called to Open A. F. of L. Drive

Green Summons Council, Attacks Broun; Miners Gather Tomorrow.

By Russell Smith

Lines of the American Federation of Labor and the Committee for Industrial Organization were drawn tighter yesterday in their historic controversy over organization of American labor in mass or craft unions.

The executive council of the A. F. of L. was summoned by its president, William Green, to meet August 21 in Atlantic City to prepare for an intensified campaign in the fall, aimed to offset the strength which the C. I. O. says it has gained since its organization.

United Mine Workers executives began assembling for a meeting here tomorrow which may turn out to be a "treason trial" of Green, in the terminology of some C. I. O. officials. Since the U. M. W. was organized in 1890, Green has been a member. Departure of the mine workers from the A. F. of L., however, has caused demands within the union for Green's expulsion.

Green Assails Broun.

Symbolizing this mass-craft union dispute, which has split organized labor in its greatest schism, was a sharply worded statement of Green yesterday assailing Heywood Broun, New York columnist and president of the American Newspaper Guild. Broun is a C. I. O. member and a guild convention recently voted to affiliate with that organization.

Broun's speech Friday to a Washington Guild unit was made a special target by Green.

The jurisdictional issue between the two organizations now is sharply joined on the Pacific Coast, where the Seattle Star Guild unit is striking against recognition by that newspaper of an A. F. of L. unit among the paper's truck drivers.

Recommendation of a permanent increase in dues and extension of industrial, or mass, unionism within the A. F. of L. are the two chief questions the federation executive council will face when it meets in Atlantic City.

Both Claim Increases.

Green said the A. F. of L. membership has risen steadily since suspension of the ten C. I. O. unions in September. The membership was 3,091,000 on July 1, he said, or about 632,000 more than were on the rolls on August 31, 1936.

The C. I. O. likewise asserts it has more than 3,000,000 members in the unions now affiliated with it.

Specific charges against Green at tomorrow's C. I. O. meeting of the U. M. W. executive board are that he assisted competition between unions by issuing a charter to the rival Progressive Miners Union.

In his attack yesterday, Green demanded that Broun resign as president of the Guild and charged him with being "a stooge for Communists." He added:

"Mr. Broun, who calls me the 'Benedict Arnold' of American labor, placed his convention on record, thereby binding some 10,000 working newspaper editorial men in favor of a farmer-labor party, and in favor of one faction in Spain. As Paul Y. Anderson, Washington correspondent of the St. Louis Post Dispatch, no friend of mine, so wittily put it: 'The convention did not indorse murder, highway robbery or arson.'

Talk of Repudiation.

"The Washington unit, the Columbus, Ohio, unit, and other units from California to Michigan to Massachusetts are now in process of holding a referendum in which complete repudiation of the St. Louis convention appears on the ballot."

"At last Friday night's meeting the conservative Herald-Tribune unit repudiated him and all his works. The liberal New York Daily News unit did likewise.

"Funniest of all, the unit of the guild in the Daily Worker, newspaper of the Communists of the United States, repudiated Mr. Broun on the ground, I am reliably told, of 'infantile leftism.'"

Broun Would Restrict Vote.

Columbus, Ohio, July 18 (AP).—Heywood Broun, Newspaper Guild president, said today he was opposed to a plan whereby newspaper business office workers in the guild would be permitted to participate in a national referendum on the question of guild affiliation with the C. I. O.

Speaking before the Columbus Guild unit, which proposed the "rank-and-file" referendum, Broun said that "at least two other members of the international executive board have agreed that the newly admitted office workers should be barred from the poll."

New York Guild officers, he said, have announced office workers would be permitted to vote.

Broun also said he "now favors organization of newspaper offices into federated units with editorial workers retaining their own autonomy."

He said he had not realized there would be strong opposition against admitting business and advertising office workers into the guild.

600 Planes Stage 'Show' in France

Paris, July 18 (U.P.).—Six hundred modern fighting planes, including some of the latest types of commercial ships adaptable to military purposes, staged a mammoth demonstration today for 150,000 spectators at Villacoublay Airdrome.

"Fighting" between fast chasers, bombers attacked by chasers, coordinated maneuvers between speedy armored cars and planes and an exhibition by 40 parachute jumpers, who landed with machine guns and full equipment gave the spectators an idea how France's air fleet might perform in war time.

The feature of the demonstration was the mass parachute jump of equipped infantrymen who landed behind "enemy lines." This new form of combat was first developed by the Soviet Union and introduced to France by Air Minister Pierre Cot, who witnessed the Russian demonstration.

New Faces in Congress

Rep. Arnold Assails Congress Making D.C. 'Whipping Boy'

REPRESENTATIVE LAWRENCE ARNOLD.

Illinois Member Admits He Was Bred to Politics; Takes Interest in Farm Tenancy Laws; Served in House of Home State.

Lawrence Arnold, member of the District of Columbia committee, assails Congress for making the Capital the whipping boy of the Nation.

"I feel Congressional members pick unduly on the District," he commented. "Perhaps because Congress does not relish legislating for such a small area."

The 46-year-old Representative from Newton, Ill., likens the District to a step-child that is being punished though there is no necessity for discipline.

Biographical sketch: He was born in Newton, Ill.; educated in the Newton High School and studied political science at the University of Chicago. Was a member of the Illinois House of Representatives from 1922 to 1926 and served three more terms between 1932 and 1936. In the meantime he was associated with the wholesale hay and grain business and was instrumental in supporting an invalid father and mother. Became president of the Peoples State Bank of Newton, a position which he still holds.

Admitting he was bred to this business of politics, Representative Arnold takes a deep interest in farm tenancy and the "equalization of the farmer's income." His district—Illinois' Twenty-third—has a high percentage of farm tenants.

Tests Expected to Shed Light On Lasting Power of Digitalis

Virginia Medical College Pharmacologist Expects to Learn Potency of Heart Treatment Drug in Experiments.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., July 18.—Tests expected to throw new light on the extent to which digitalis, the drug on which many persons depend for their lives, loses its potency over a period of time are being conducted here by Dr. H. B. Haag, professor of pharmacology at Medical College of Virginia.

The experiments, which are being made principally on cats and frogs, are of interest to persons suffering from heart disease, as digitalis is one of the most important drugs used in the treatment of this malady.

Dr. Haag said that digitalis tinctures have lost from 10 to 50 per cent of their strength when tested on frogs, yet many of the same tinctures showed no loss of strength when tested on cats.

"We are not only trying to determine how much potency is lost over a period of time," Dr. Haag explained, "but also are attempting to find some means by which the drug can be made to maintain a constant strength.

Dr. Haag said one of the few commercially cultivated fields of digitalis plants, from which the drug is made, is located near Richmond. The field has an area of about 2½ acres on which are planted from 8,000 to 12,000 plants. The average yield per acre is about 800 to 1,000 pounds.

The value of digitalis in treating heart disease, Dr. Haag said, is that the drug increases the tone and slows the beat so that the heart can fill and empty more completely with each throb.

Discussing the drug's origin, he said that digitalis, "now listed as one of the five most important drugs, was introduced in 1785 as a part of a secret formula owned by a woman in Shropshire, England. She refused to divulge her secret until it was purchased by William Withering, who first used it in the treatment of dropsy."

RobedBandWarns 20 Roadhouses to 'Clean Up or Close'

Anderson, S. C., July 18 (AP).—Sheriff's officers sought today to trace the identities of 18 black-robed, white-hooded men who delivered typewritten notes to the operators of 20-odd nearby roadhouses warning to "clean up or close up."

The messages were delivered Friday night, but it was business as usual for the "hot spots" over the week-end and there was no visible effort to discourage fun and frolic.

Solicitor Rufus Fant in a public statement warned that persons convicted of intimidating others while robed and masked would be subject to prison sentences of from one to ten years.

"Should a masked man be shot and killed while making threats in the place of business of another," he said, "little or nothing could be done about it except to bury the victim."

New Pittsburgh Aspirant For Mayor Expected

Pittsburgh, July 18 (AP).—Politicians awaited tonight with unusual interest an expected announcement by Council President P. J. McArdle regarding the approaching mayoralty election, which may mean an open breach in the Democratic ranks.

Both the Post-Gazette and Sun-Telegraph predicted the veteran labor leader will become a candidate opposing re-election of Mayor Cornelius D. Scully, who has the backing of David L. Lawrence, powerful State Democratic State chairman.

Wagner Asks Housing Bill's Passage Now

Time Ripe for Action, He Says; Gets Support of Gov. Murphy.

"The time is ripe for action now," Senator Robert F. Wagner (Democrat), of New York, said in a statement yesterday appealing anew for early enactment of the Wagner-Steagall housing bill.

In his statement, with which he made public a letter of support from Gov. Frank Murphy of Michigan, Wagner stressed the need to bring adequate housing within reach of "underprivileged groups" and what he termed the impossibility of achieving this aim through "purely private speculative financing."

In his letter to Wagner, Murphy said:

"My interest in the rights of the wage earners of the country to enjoy the blessings of economic independence guaranteed to every American citizen by the principles of a democratic form of government gives me a keen appreciation of the necessity for a practical and effective housing program for this country. Increased wages, shorter working hours and security in employment are the sine quo non of economic justice for the great mass of workers.

"But if these do not secure for the workers the basic necessities of life, then they have failed in their purpose.

"I want to congratulate you on the effort you have made, the intelligent manner in which you have attacked the housing problem and to do everything in my power to help you to enact the enunciated principles of the Wagner-Steagall bill into law.

After quoting the latter, Wagner went on:

"The impossibility of reaching the slum dweller without public housing and public subsidy has long been proved. It is further illustrated by a story of July 17 in the New York Times, reporting a recent announcement by the Federal Housing Administrator of a plan for a project soon to be commenced under the low-cost housing section of the FHA law. This project, according to the Times story, will rent for not more than $19.00 per room per month.

"It is generally conceded that a typical family would need an annual income of more than $3,500 to afford that kind of rental.

"I do not intend in the slightest to criticize the FHA for its past work or its plans for the future. It is serving a useful and necessary function in insuring private loans for homes for people of moderate means. I want to help in that work But, in addition, every new project proves more conclusively that purely private speculative financing without public subsidy can never get housing anywhere near the slum dweller. To help those underprivileged groups whose immediate help is one of the most imperative necessities of the moment, both from the social and general economic standpoint, requires the prompt passage of the Wagner-Steagall act. The time for 'study' is over. The time is ripe for action now."

2 Fliers Escape As Plane Crashes In Path of Train

Beaver Falls, Pa., July 18 (AP).—Two fliers narrowly escaped tonight as their ship skidded to a forced landing on railroad tracks directly into the path of a Baltimore & Ohio freight train.

Engineer J. Walters screeched the wheels of his engine to a stop a few feet from the wrecked ship. He leaped out and, with the fireman, rescued N. Seaman, 28-year-old student pilot, and Thomas Urista, 18, the pilot.

Because of the isolated position of the accident, 3 miles north of Beaver Falls, the engineer uncoupled his engine and speeded the injured men to Beaver Falls.

At Providence Hospital attendants reported Seaman's condition as critical. Urista was not believed badly hurt.

Building Union In Pittsburgh Ready to Strike

Service Group Threatens Tieup Unless Contract Is Signed.

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, July 18.—The Building Service Employes Union, an A. F. of L. affiliate, threatened tonight to call a strike within 24 hours in all buildings whose operators decline to sign a labor contract with the organization.

"We can immediately halt the upkeep and service operations in more than half of the buildings in Pittsburgh with the strike of elevator operators, bell boys, chamber maids, janitors, housemen and watchmen," asserted Charles C. Levey, international representative of the union.

Levey said his organization has more than 12,000 members and predicted hundreds more would join with calling of a strike.

Earlier in the day members of the C. I. O.-sponsored railway Equipment and Air Brake Workers Local 610 voted against striking at the Westinghouse Air Brake Co.'s plant in suburban Wilmerding.

Instead the delegates decided to indorse pushing of demands before the National Labor Relations Board for a "forced" election to determine the sole collective bargaining agency for the 6,000 workers.

Ford Witnesses Called.

Detroit, July 18 (AP).—Anxious to conclude its hearings, the National Labor Relations Board summoned additional witnesses to appear tomorrow at the resumption of its hearing into charges of unfair labor practices against the Ford Motor Co.

A temporary truce was in effect in the State-wide strike of truck drivers as Gov. Murphy prepared to appoint a five-man commission to make a 30-day study of the State's trucking industry.

Williams Head Out After He Protests Purchase of Hotel

Williamstown, Mass., July 18 (AP).—President Tyler Dennett of Williams College announced tonight he had resigned a month ago. Trustees of the college, he said, had planned to make his resignation public when a successor was appointed, but recently circulated rumors prompted him to disclose his action.

Disagreement with the trustees over financial policies of Williams, brought to a head by their action in purchasing a large hotel property near the campus over his protests, led to the rift, Dr. Dennett, a Pulitzer history prize-winner, declared.

Dr. Dennett opposed the purchase of the hotel because he said the money was needed for educational purposes. The trustees said the action was necessary to keep the property from falling into undesirable hands.

An authentic source said James Phinney Baxter 3d, a professor at Harvard and a Williams graduate, was expected to succeed Dr. Dennett. Dr. Dennett will retain the presidency until September 1.

Reich Pastors Arrested For Taking Collections

Berlin, July 18 (U.P.).—The secret police pressed their drive against the anti-Nazi Confessional Synod of the Lutheran Church today with the arrest of four religious leaders accused of making "unauthorized collections" in churches.

A decree by Church Minister Hans Kerrl a week ago established a church financial committee and forbade pastors from collecting funds. Among those arrested was Dr. Karl Hildebrandt, of Berlin's Dahlen Church, who subsituted for the Rev. Martin Niemoeller, leader of the confessional movement, who is in Moabit Prison awaiting trial.

U. S. Designs New Airplane For Service 30,000 Feet in Sky

World's Most Formidable Craft to Operate in Sub-Stratosphere Has Motors Behind Wings; Carries 6 Guns, Bombs.

By the Associated Press.

The Army is ready to send into the air what it terms the most formidable fighting plane in the world—a monoplane for combat in the sub-stratosphere.

The new five-seater fighter, being prepared for test flights at the Bell Aircraft Corporation plant at Buffalo, N. Y., is a radical departure from previous military designs. The Air Corps will devise new tactics to fit its use up to altitudes of 30,000 feet.

The all-metal, armored plane is a twin-motored "pusher" (with propellers behind the wings), carries six machine guns and light bombs, and has new devices to increase its speed and fighting power.

The War Department said the plane had been designed to cope with the "giant bombing planes of the flying fortress type now flying in the leading nations of the world."

After factory tests the plane will be flown to Wright Field, Dayton, Ohio, for experimental flights by Army men, and then sent to the general headquarters air force at Langley Feld, Va.

Air Corps officials said the plane will be of the pusher type to give increased propeller efficiency. That arrangement also will permit the wing gunners, one in either wing, to have a free field of fire and observation, unobstructed by engine or propeller. The new design also frees the gunners from having to work in the propeller blast, a tremendous handicap to gun maneuvers and accuracy on the existing type planes.

"To be a successful fighter," the department explained, "a flying machine must be much faster than its target. It is believed this plane can overhaul any air targets. Another essential quality in an air destroyer is the ability to strike with power when it has engaged its prey. This plane answers with six guns, more powerful armament than ever before carried on a fighter."

Officials emphasized the new plane is not a small airplane as have been previous pursuit planes. It will have a pilot, copilot-navigator, radio operator-gunner and two outboard wing gunners.

The new plane has heated compartments for the crew, because otherwise the airmen would have to work in frigid temperatures at the 30,000-foot ceiling.

Big Bus Stolen, Youths Who Lost Own Car Blamed

Oakland, Calif., July 18 (AP).—Somewhat startled by having to find a stolen 24-passenger bus, police tonight charged the theft to three youths who had to get home somehow early today after their own car disappeared.

The three attended a dance at Napa, 35 miles away. When they got ready to leave about 3 a. m. their car was missing.

They simply went to the nearest bus station, said Lieut. L. M. Carroll, and finding that the last bus had gone, took the last bus left in the station—and drove home.

But they took the longest way, Carroll reported, from Napa to Sacramento, then to Stockton, to Tracy and, finally, to Oakland via Berkeley and Piedmont, about 150 miles.

The air horn of the bus honked all the long miles.

During the final stages of their trip, police said, residents in the hills back of Berkeley and Oakland flooded the offices of the Greyhound Bus Co. with complaints that the driver was blasting the Sabbath quiet.

Lieut. Carroll said Emerson La Grange, 19; Jack Butter, 21, and a third youth, still unlocated, would be charged with grand theft.

Liquor Czar's Son Lost in Michigan

Lansing, Mich., July 18 (AP).—Detective Lieut. Harold F. Mulbar of the Michigan State Police disclosed tonight a Statewide search had been instituted for Robert McFarland, 20, son of Edward W. McFarland, chairman of the State liquor control commission, missing since Saturday morning.

Young McFarland, police were told, left the family residence in Detroit to drive to Lansing to visit his father. The elder McFarland said he had not received any threats in connection with his duties as head of the liquor commission.

Mulbar said young McFarland may have been held up by a hitchhiker.

Negligence Is Blamed For Ouster of Toro

Bank Bandit Slain, $10,000 Loot Lost

Springfield, Mo., July 18 (AP).—Ten thousand dollars in bank loot, missing when a robber suspect was killed near here last night, sent officers searching today for a confederate or a cache where the money may have been hidden.

The man, identified by Sheriff Pierpont as Mearle James Turpin, a former convict, was killed by Highway Patrolmen Ralph Eidson and Hubert Brooks when he met with shotgun fire their effort to arrest him for a $22,000 holdup at the Citizens Bank here Thursday morning.

Approximately $112,000 was recovered from the slain man's automobile and clothing.

FBI Academy To Close Fifth Term July 24

Number of Police School Graduates to Be Boosted to 151.

The fifth session of the National Police Academy of the Federal Bureau of Investigation will end July 24, boosting the number of graduates of the school to 151, it was announced yesterday from office of John Edgar Hoover, F. B. I. director.

Graduates of the academy, which was started in 1935, represent 46 States and 1 Territory and have made F. B. I. expert instruction available to 59,744 police officers. The sixth session was started July 12.

The course lasts 12 weeks, and for it are selected only applicants between 25 and 35, who are graduates of law schools of recognized standing and are expert accountants or are "possessed of a constructive type of law-enforcement experience."

Numerous instances in which graduates have returned home to be of assistance to local authorities were cited by Mr. Hoover. From the scientific training obtained, graduates have been able to utilize information obtained from an examination of evidence after untrained officers failed.

In other instances they have been able to utilize their knowledge of latent fingerprints, to ascertain definitely whether a person committed suicide or was murdered, and to apply infallible methods to marks made by "jimmies."

The economy of effective police training and the chance it provides for rapid advancement were stressed in the F. B. I. announcement.

Robbery Suspect Caught.

Indianapolis, July 18 (AP).—Herold H. Reinecke, in charge of the Federal Bureau of Investigation office here, said today F. B. I. agents arrested Raymond Driscoll, under indictment in New Jersey and Pennsylvania for bank robberies, in the home of Gary, Ind., relatives early today.

Driscoll, whose criminal record dates back to 1917, surrendered to agents from the Indianapolis division and Gary Police Officers Peter Coleman and Harold Miller. When the officers went to the home of Driscoll's relatives, whose names were not disclosed, the gunman greeted them drowsily and showed no signs of fight, Reinecke said.

The 41-year-old fugitive, a native of Erie, Pa., has operated under more than a dozen aliases, Reinecke said.

Paris Pushes 3-Year Plan to Save Industry

Greater Production Made Key to Attempt to Wipe Out Deficits.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, July 18.—Premier Camille Chautemps today was developing a three-year plan he hopes will pull France out of her economic difficulties.

Chautemps, who formed France's second Peoples' Front government June 22, succeeding Socialist Leon Blum, has said he will appeal to France to increase production while he and Finance Minister Georges Bonnet attempt to wipe out the treasury deficit in three years.

The 1937 deficit of 36,107,000,000 francs (about $1,588,708,000) can be met in 1940, he believes, if more goods are produced to circulate more money and bring in more taxes. The problem is to increase production and at the same time reduce working hours.

Pledges 40-Hour Week.

This Peoples' Front government, like the previous one, is pledged to make the 40-hour working week universal in France, and an even shorter week is the aim of the powerful General Confederation of Labor, which is an important element of the government's suppodt.

Industrialists say, however, that their taxable profits are down to zero, and that France must be willing to work overtime to dig herself out of the difficulty. Employers say that most workers, although enjoying increased incomes due to the government program, are not spending the additional money but are tucking it away.

Chautemps is expected to seek a three-way agreement among employers' associations, the General Confederation of Labor and the government to insure industrial peace while the production problem is attacked.

Tax Boosts Proposed.

Immediate measures to balance the budget include increased telephone, telegraph and postal rates, higher passenger and freight rates, and taxes in the higher-income brackets. The taxes are expected to yield 8,000,000,000 francs ($304,000,000).

The ministry of finance divided the deficit this way:

Deficit of 8,000,000,000 francs in regular budget due to miscalculation of new tax yields.

Deficit of extraordinary budget, principally for increased armaments, 8,500,000,000 francs.

Bank of France advances on future revenue, 9,000,000,000 francs.

Maturing bond issues, 5,400,000,000 francs.

Treasury bonds floated during Blum's regime, 807,000,000 francs.

A 4,400,000,000 franc payment of about one-twelfth on a British loan due in December.

Will Borrow $590,000,000.

To help carry the deficit in the immediate future the government was authorized to borrow an additional 15,000,000,000 francs ($590,000,000) from the Bank of France, which already has advanced 10,000,000,000 francs ($380,000,000).

One of Bonnet's first acts after hurrying home from Washington to take part in the new government was to unpeg the franc, which slid more than 15 per cent. In unofficial Saturday trading it had declined to 26.57 to the dollar.

Bankers shook their heads and declared the recession should have been accompanied by a similar lowering of tariffs to keep domestic prices equal. They declared that with tariffs remaining up, the price of foreign goods will rise in terms of francs, domestic prices will follow and there will be unpleasant political results.

Scottsboro Trials Face Longer Delay

Decatur, Ala., July 18 (AP).—Further postponement of the "Scottsboro" trials was indicated today as Clarence Watts, defense attorney, who became ill last week, announced he could not attend court sessions tomorrow.

Andy Wright and Charlie Weems, two of the nine Negroes accused of attacking Victoria Price and Ruby Bates aboard a freight train more than six years ago, are scheduled to be tried this week. Wright's case is set for tomorrow.

Farmers Informed Italy Self-Sufficient in Wheat

Rome, July 18 (AP).—Minister of Ariculture Edmundo Rossoni told Italian farmers in a radio address today that Italy this year achieved self-sufficiency in wheat.

He said the harvest for 1937 exceeds 80,000,000 quintals (about 292,000,000 bushels) and that Italy was the only country which kept the price of bread unchanged in the past year.

turn notified Emergency Hospital, harbor police and the fire department.

An ambulance took the survivors to Eemergency Hospital, where after an examination they were allowed to go home.

The Firefighter hurried to the scene, but by this time the burning cruiser was drifting into shallow water near the seawall. The fire finally was extinguished by a police boat, using a small hose. By that time, however, it was a mere shell.

The owner of the boat was not aboard. He is Emil Diaz, a mechanic employed by the Harley-Davidson Co. Before he left for that company's plant in Milwaukee, Diaz loaned his boat to Wilmer Hallowell.

Cook, who was operating the boat yesterday, gave this account of his experience:

"We started out about 2 o'clock and went as far as Alexandria. On the way back we stopped at the Naval Air Station for gas. We were headed home with the tank full when the motor suddenly exploded in my face.

"A part of the deck was blown up, gas sprayed my face and I was hurled overboard. I was on fire, but the water put it out.

"I swam around and helped pull Miss Heritage—the one from North Carolina—out of the water when a boat rescued us.

"I don't know what could have caused the explosion. It must have been faulty ignition wiring."

Cronk was merely reported late yesterday as "not accounted for." This morning harbor police will begin dragging for his body.

Wilmer Dennis Hollowell, who had borrowed the boat, was crushed last night over the death of Cronk.

"He had been my best friend for years," Hollowell said, "but I didn't know he couldn't swim. After I got in the water, I looked around and saw Cronk paddling in the water.

"A little later, he called my name. I thought he was all right and went over to help my father and mother."

The mother of Mary Ellen, Mrs. Martha Heritage Hollowell, was ill and unable to go on the cruise. She is the sister of the Misses Heritage who were rescued.

Miss Charlsie Heritage is secretary to the Hollowell brothers who are members of the law firm of Hollowell & Hollowell. The other sister, Edna, was visiting here from Winston-Salem.

Boys Pull Levers, Excavator Starts, Then Catches Fire

A group of small Washington boys yesterday realized—or almost realized—the ambition of every young American.

Climbing into the cab of one of a group of gasoline excavators being used on roadwork at Fourth and Franklin streets northeast, the boys tinkered with the countless levers and gadgets until finally the motor started.

Before it could be decided who should have the honor of scooping the first shovel full of dirt, a short circuit set fire to grease in the cab.

Firemen, called by the neighbors, found little fire and no boys.

'Halos' as Church Wear Banned in Louisville

Louisville, Ky., July 18 (AP).—"Halo" hats, latest feminine headgear, were banned today as "inadequate" for wear in Catholic churches of Louisville.

Father E. E. Willett, pastor of St. James' Catholic Church and vicar general of the Louisville diocese, today said:

"I understand these (hats) are called halos. I am sorry. The ladies here will have to wait until they get to heaven before they can wear their halos."

Jailed Pastor's Return Hailed

By the Associated Press.

Zion, Ill., July 18.—The Rev. Richard Jennings Dake, amid a chorus of halleluiahs, returned today from a five-month sojourn in the Milwaukee (Wis.) House of Correction.

The saxophone trio of his Christian Assembly Church played "His Grace Is Greater Than Our Sins," and the handsome, 33-year-old pastor sounded a solemn warning against "human weaknesses" and urged listeners to "forget the past."

"Amen," the congregation echoed.

The Rev. Mr. Drake made a direct reference to his imprisonment, resulting from his plea of guilty to violation of the Mann act. A 16-year-old Kenosha girl said she was his companion on trips to Bloomington and East St. Louis, Ill.

His church, which he left in the hands of his wife while he served his sentence, was comfortably full. After the services, many members of the congregation came forward to shake his hand.

2 Film Extras Held as Party Ends in Death

Physician Says He Saw Woman Attorney Knocked Down and Kicked.

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, July 18.—Two minor film players were held today in connection with the death of Mrs. Dorothy May Garland, 31, an attorney.

Mrs. Garland died in Hollywood Hospital last night, and acting on a report from her physician, Dr. Wendell W. Starr, police arrested Kay Tutwiler, 29, and Luther Allen, 32, both screen extras.

Miss Tutwiler was charged with suspicion of murder. Allen was held as a material witness.

Three Drank Together.

Dr. Starr reported to police that he had been treating Mrs. Garland for alcoholism and that last Wednesday night he went to her home to make a professional visit. Mrs. Garland, Miss Tutwiler and Allen had been drinking, he said, and the two women engaged in a quarrell in which Mrs. Garland was thrown to the floor and kicked.

Her condition became critical immediately after he stopped the fight, said Dr. Starr, but Mrs. Garland refused to go to the hospital until Friday morning.

Mrs. Garland, University of Southern California Law School graduate, was one-time chief trial deputy in the city attorney's office.

Accused of Alienation.

She resigned to enter practice with her husband, James P. Garland, from whom she later became estranged.

Mrs. Garland was named defendant this spring in a $130000 alienation of affections suit filed by Mrs. Marie Yarnell, who charged the woman lawyer stole the love of her husband, Earl Yarnell, police officer. Mrs. Garland filed answer denying the charges.

Colored Cleric Stages Solo Sit-Down Strike

Hot Springs, Ark., July 18 (AP).—A one-man sit-down strike by the Rev. J. H. Ellis, pastor of the Haven Afro Methodist Church, until his congregation contributes $1,000 to refinance the church indebtedness brought a few "peeves" today—and considerable cash.

The minister, who announced there would be no further sermons until the money was forthcoming, said he had received contributions totaling $710 at today's exercises.

"I think we will complete the contribution by tomorrow night or at least by the end of the week," he said. "If we don't I will just keep on sitting down."

Chautemps to Combat Violence by Strikers

Paris, July 18 (AP).—Premier Camille Chautemps declared today his government was resolved to put an end to "shameful practices," referring to violence committed by striking hotel and restaurant empioyes.

Saying he and Minister of Labor Andre Fevrier had found it impossible so far to put an end to the strikes, Chautemps added: "It is necessary for everyone to understand that if the government intends to be completely impartial in labor disputes, it is impossible for the government to show any weakness toward violation of the law."

Rare Photograph of Lincoln Donated to Historical Society

War President Snapped With Gen. McClellan After Battle of Antietam; Descendants of Heroes Invited to Coming Celebration.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, July 1.—A photograph of President Abraham Lincoln seated in the tent of Gen. George B. McClellan, commander in chief of the Union Army at the battle of Antietam, a print not known to exist, has come into possession of the Washington County Historical Society and will be displayed in the museum of relics of the battle at the National Antietam Commemoration in September.

President Lincoln arrived in Sharpsburg two weeks following the battle, and was accompanied by John W. Garrett, president of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad; Marshal Lamon, of the District of Columbia and others. They came by railroad to Frederick and rode the 20 miles from that city to Sharpsburg in an Army ambulance, and remained several days with Gen. McClellan, visiting the battlefields of Antietam and South Mountain and many of the hospitals. While in one of the homes that housed a number of Confederate wounded, Lincoln told them that the solemn obligations which we owe to our country and posterity compel the prosecution of this war, and it followed that many were our enemies, through uncontrollable circumstances, and he bore them no malice and could take them by the hand with sympathy and good feeling. After a short silence, history relates that the Confederates came forward and each silently but fervently shook the hand of the President.

Many other rare old prints and paintings made on the scene of the battle, including one of "Bloody Lane" the morning after the battle, showing bodies three deep lying in the road, have been added to the museum.

Among the thousands of invitations that were mailed out during the last week were many to descendants of famous men who fought in the battle, including the late Presidents William McKinley and Rutherford B. Hays, both of whom distinguished themselves in the battle; Charles Longfellow, son of America's most popular poet; Fletcher Webster, son of Daniel Webster, and Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, who was a captain in the battle and was wounded. Holmes convalesced from a wound in the neck at the home of Mrs. James Findlay here. Mrs. Findlay, then a small girl, remembers the stay of Holmes at her home.

Hoffman, who died in the Loudoun County hospital, was well known in horse show and racing circles. He was in the horse vanning business. Surviving are his widow and one son.

Trade Retarded By Talk of War

Future economic progress of the United States is endangered by persistence of war talk abroad and by domestic unemployment, the Commerce Department said last night.

"It is obvious that many influences at present are aiding the upward spiral of recovery," the department's economic review for 1936 said, "but at the same time there are other conditions in existence which, if not corrected, may seriously impair the chances of realizing full recovery."

"This situation," the review continues, "has resulted in a worldwide armament program which has been intensified, rather than lessened, in recent months. This threat also manifests itself in the extension or persistence of nationalistic policies which hamper the flow of international trade."

Burglar Suspect Caught.

Lufkin, Tex., July 18 (AP).—Police said a man identified as Johnnie Sowell, 27, a Florida former convict wanted on burglary charges in three States, was captured today at his father's home near here.

Costa Rican Girl's Plane Is Wrecked; U. S. Soldier Held

Langley Field, Va., July 18 (AP).—An Army private was arrested by civil authorities in connection with the wrecking of a private plane owned by a Costa Rican aviatrix studying in Virginia.

Senorita Carmendita de Venegas y Campos, of San Jose, a student at Virginia Polytechnic Institute, obtained the warrant on which Sheriff J. H. Pinckard, of Lancaster County, arrested a Private McGinnins as a Federal fugitive.

Langley Field authorities said they were informed the plane crashed today near the Rappahannock River in Lancaster County while being flown by McGinnis, accompanied by a Private Ogden.

Officials expressed the belief the men, members of a servicing crew, took the plane from its hangar early today to make a short weather observation flight and crashed. Neither man was reported hurt.

The senorita landed here Saturday to visit friends.

Interior Workers Plan Joint Recreation Setup

The first general mass meeting of Department of Interior employes was held recently to discuss the newly organized Interior Department Recreational Association. The new organization will attempt to bring the 9,800 employes of the department together in a single program of athletic, social and educational activity.

The employes, permanently housed in one unit for the first time, were addressed by Col. H. B. Hackett, who indorsed the purposes of the new organization. Howard R. Stinson, chairman of the membership committee, is assisted in his work by 15 representatives of the various departments.

Frank J. Logan Dies.

Chicago, July 18 (AP).—Frank J. Logan, 85, retired capitalist and art patron, died today.

Mrs. McLean Dons Hope Diamond, Town Forgets Fete

Central City, Colo., July 18 (AP).—Central City's annual play festival found stern competition for attention today from a wholly unexpected source—the storied Hope diamond owned by Mrs. Evalyn Walsh McLean, of Washington.

Mrs. McLean, whose father dug a fortune from Colorado gold mines, is making her first visit to the 6-year-old play festival in this 8,300-foot-high mining camp.

She strolled about the narrow sidewalks, the famous diamond, nearly as large as a silver dollar, gleaming against her flowered dress.

The stone glowed from an aisle seat a few rows from the orchestra pit last night as its owner watched the opening of Isben's "A Doll's House" in the opera house built by miners.

The Hope gem and diamond bracelets Mrs. McLean wore are reputed to have a value far greater than the $800,000 worth of gold dug last year from Central City's mines.

'William Tell' Aper Held.

Budapest, July 18 (AP).—Police arrested Steven Debreczeni today charging he tired to imitate "William Tell" but failed. They said Debreczeni tried to shoot an apple from the head of Joseph Szollosi at a rifle club meeting, but wounded him in the forehead.

Catholics Called To Lead Nation In Labor Peace

Cardinal Gibbons' Ideas Invoked at Observance of 103d Birthday.

by man for social amelioration." Dr. Fitzpatrick declared his inability to understand why employers are willing to sign for all other commodities except labor. Only the insincerity of some can be offered as the explanation for "this unique deviation from ordinary business practices."

"Hardheadedness" Assailed.

He declared that by their insincerity the employers "who rant about Communism are the ones seeking to frustrate the law, thereby inviting a Bolshevik form of government." Also acting with hardheadedness, he said, are numerous labor organizations.

"They, too, can contribute to industrial peace by an orderly arrangement of their own house. Unless they regulate themselves, public opinion will again be aroused to the point where Congress will let loose a barrage of restrictive laws. A highly centralized authority and democracy do not go hand in hand. Every bit of national legislation designed to control movements of the individual is another step toward the downfall of the democracy we enjoy and cherish today."

Cardinal Gibbons, he said, fought for tolerance and understanding, abhorred violence and coercion, and sought co-operation "rather than threats, of both capital and labor in the settlement of industrial disputes."

Interpreted Church.

Walter I. Plant, State deputy of the Washington General Assembly, Fourth Degree, Knights of Columbus, presided at the ceremonies and in his opening remarks paid tribute to the contribution Cardinal Gibbons made in explaining the Catholic Church to America and America to Catholic immigrants.

"Cardinal Gibbons made it his life work to interpret Catholicism and American institutions to his fellow citizens outside the church. That he was eminently successful is shown in the prestige and respect which Catholicism now enjoys in the United States.

"It was his task, too, to interpret American Government and institutions to his fellow Catholics, pouring in from European lands, and to infuse in them a spark of his own pure enthusiasm and great love for American citizenship."

He said that in the lives of Cardinal Gibbons and other Ctholic prelates is abundant proof that Catholicism and the highest type of Americanism are thoroughly compatible.

Catholics as Patriots.

"The proud record of Catholics as patriots is testimony of the success of his efforts. May the pure love of God and wise love of country which characterized his life be ever characteristic of American Catholics."

The Rev. Dr. Joseph P. Christopher, professor of languages at Catholic University of America, in the invocation paid tribute to Cardinal Gibbons as "churchman and citizen."

He called attention to his work as "the interpreter and exponent of American Catholicism to Europe," and quoted from his writings his belief "that the Constitution of the Unite dStates is the greatest instrument of government that has ever issued from the hand of man."

Wreaths were presented by the following: Supreme Council, Knights of Columbus, by George E. Herring, past State deputy for the District of Columbia; Maryland, sent by Gov. Harry W. # Sen. Robinson Buried in Rain; Friends Attend

Storm Clouds at Funeral Remindful of Battle at Life's Close.

white man," asserted one elderly colored man—and his popularity among the colored people was attested by the men who knew him well.

From the outpouring of people at the State Capitol, along the route of the funeral procession, around the First Methodist Church and at the cemetery, it was evident Joe Robinson was regarded as a friend by persons in all walks of life, irrespective of creed, color or race.

With four of his priests beside him, Bishop John Morris, the Catholic bishop of Little Rock, sat in the First Methodist Church throughout the service, and there were tears in the aged prelate's eyes as he left the church. Two blocks down the street the bell on the Greek Orthodox Church tolled mournfully during the service and as the funeral procession passed.

The Robinson funeral train arrived here at 7:30 o'clock and a few minutes later the body was removed to the stone and frame Robinson home. Mrs. Robinson, accompanied by her brothers and relatives, Senator Hattie Caraway, now Arkansas' senior Senator, Baruch and Harvey Couch, Arkansas utilities magnate, went immediately to the home.

Garner Calls at Home.

For several hours friends of the family and neighbors called to express their sympathy to Mrs. Robinson and to view the body. Vice President Garner, arriving by motor from Uvalde, Tex., also called at the home. He spent several minutes with Mrs. Robinson but declined to view his old friend in death, expressing a wish that the laughing, jovial Joe Robinson should be his last memory of him.

The body was removed to the rotunda of the State Capitol shortly after 10 a. m. and set among a veritable garden of flowers. There those who escorted the body from Washington passed before it at 10:30. Meanwhile, thousands of Arkansans from the bottom lands and from the Ozarks, as well as from Little Rock, pushed and shuffled past the flower-laden coffin and the Arkansas State flag which adorned its cover.

The funeral service commenced at 3 p. m., with the Rev. H. Bascom Watts, minister of the church, intoning the words: "I am the resurrection and the life." There were several hymns, the reading of Biblical verses and a prayer. The clergyman delivered a short eulogy in which he predicted that "time will assign to Joseph Robinson a high place in history" and might list him among Clay, Calhoun and Webster as one of the great legislators of America. He praised the dead political leader for his "militancy and sincerity" and for his human and kindly ways. The Rev. James Thomas concluded the service with benediction.

Lightning Greets Procession.

As the body was carried from the church, lightning followed by thunder broke from the dark clouds and as the procession moved along the 3-mile route to the cemetery the thunder roared louder and the skies became angrier. Then came the rain, ending the intense heat of the day.

Party Session Called.

By the Associated Press.

In Little Rock last night, Chairman Thomas Fitzhugh of the Democratic State committee, issued a call for a special session of the committee to be held here Friday afternoon to consider the method for selecting a party nominee to seek Senator Robinson's seat in the special election to be called in September.

While the State chairman acted, political leaders here predicted a temporary appointment to the Senate would be made by Gov. Bailey within the week.

J. Rosser Venable, Little Rock World War veteran, who opposed Senator Robinson in the 1936 Democratic primary, issued a statement saying: "If the committee nominates Carl Bailey as the Democratic candidate, I shall enter the race against him as an independent."

Gun Used as a Prod Kills Sleeping Man

Jamestown, N. Y., July 18 (AP).—Coroner Henry C. Wadsworth said Harry Sanford, 36-year-old farmhand, was killed today when Milton S. Hultman, 13, prodded Sanford with a shotgun to wake him up and the gun discharged. The boy was vacationing on the farm where Sanford was employed. The boy was not held, but a coroner's investigation will be held tomorrow.

Austrian Veterans' Parade Canceled For Nazi Salutes

Wels, Austria, July 18 (AP).—Police canceled a parade permit today when 10,000 German and Austrian war veterans gave illegal Nazi demonstrations at a meeting addressed by Frank von Papen, German Ambassador.

After the former soldiers sang the Horst Wessel song and gave the Nazi salute, several hundred police arrested a few ringleaders and threatened to clear the field if demonstrations continued.

The veterans, instead of parading in the feature event, retired to beer halls where informal demonstrations were held. Authorities estimated about 1,300 German visitors attended but it was reported the Austrians asked the number be limited.

Police with small cameras took hundreds of photographs of persons making the forbidden Nazi salute and additional arrests were expected.

Von Papen told the gathering that the German people must be fused and said, "our object is peace, but it must be with honor."

Jobless Laws Benefit Close To 21,000,000

By the Associated Press.

Social Security Board officials estimated yesterday nearly 21,000,000 workers are now covered by the unemployment compensation laws of the 48 States, Hawaii, the District of Columbia and Alaska.

This is a larger number than expected. When the social security act became effective August 14, 1935, it was generally predicted that 17,000,000 would be covered.

Illinois, last of the States to enter the system, had its law approved by the board Saturday. The law affects approximately 1,433,000 workers in employments covered.

The majority of the State laws specify that unemployment compensation funds shall be made up of contributions by employers only, although eight require employes to contribute and the District of Columbia adds a Government appropriation to employer-employe contributions.

In 44 States, the employer is required to pay 1.8 per cent of wages during 1937, and 2.7 per cent thereafter. In four, it is 2 per cent in 1937 and 3 per cent thereafter. Most of the ten States requiring employe contributions specify 1 per cent of wages.

Wisconsin, only State whose unemployment compensation law was operating before the social security act's passage, already is paying benefits to its eligible unemployed workers under the act. Twenty-two more States will begin benefit payments in January, 1938. Last to start payments will be Georgia and Montana, in July, 1939.

Most States (43) provide for benefits equal to 50 per cent of the workers' full-time weekly wage, with a maximum of $15 a week and a minimum of $5, or three-fourths of the weekly wage, whichever is less.

Two States set a higher maximum payment—Wyoming with $18 a week and Michigan with $16. Several set the minimum higher. In Oklahoma it is $8, or three-fourths of the weekly wage.

Talks on Train May Determine Court Bill Fate

Garner Takes Charge of Party Returning From Arkansas.

sides regarded his sudden return to the throttle of the Senate as of great importance.

Conferences, however, not only took place in the Garner suite, but throughout the train. For the most part these conferences centered around Postmaster General James A. Farley, Undersecretary of Interior Charles O. West, the White House's representative on Capitol Hill; and Senators Pat Harrison and Alben W. Barkley, the two contestants for the Senate leadership.

Assistant Attorney General Joseph B. Keenan remained in Little Rock for further conferences there. He will return to Washington by airplane.

An intensive drive for support was commenced by lieutenants of both Harrison and Barkley in view of the party caucus to select a leader for the Senate, scheduled for Wednesday. The view was general aboard this train, where there are 38 members of the Senate—most of whom are Democrats—that the vote on the leadership will be very close. If either side has an edge, it is said to be Senator Harrison—although Administration influence might change that situation.

Meanwhile, talk of further compromise on the Supreme Court issue contained. In the forefront of such talk tonight was a proposal to abandon all reference in the bill to age, and amend the measure to provide for a straight-out increase of two justices on the Supreme Court.

This proposal, like others however, remained in an exploratory stage. The Administration aim seems to be to find some compromise which would assure the support of five Senators generally regarded as on the fence. Leaders of the opposition, however, remained adamant against any increase whatever in the size of the court at this time by legislative action.

A third issue concerning the Democratic leaders had to do with the successor to Robinson's Senate seat. Gov. Carl Bailey of Arkansas is the key to that situation and it is generally understood that he wants the seat for himself. He controls the State Democratic executive committee, which under the law has the power to make the nomination, tantamount here to an election. Gov. Bailey, however, does not wish at this time to surrender the governorship.

But at the same time he does not wish to make an appointment to fill the vacancy pending his election. The Governor, it is explained, remembers distinctly how Mrs. Hattie Caraway was appointed to fill such a gap and then decided to fight to keep the seat. Gov. Bailey does not want anything like that to happen.

Administration leaders, however, want an appointment made as quickly as possible, since they need the additional vote. They may need it badly in the Wednesday caucus over the leadership and they may need it in the court fight.

Rebels Launch Terrific Drive Against Madrid

160 Planes in Battle, 22 Are Shot Down; Tanks in Action.

action a large number of tanks, leading waves of infantry in an attempt to capture government trenches in the vicinity of Brunete and Villanueva de Pardillo, about 18 miles west of Madrid.

Hand grenades hurled by the defenders destroyed two tanks, the government said, and drove the others back.

As the infantry and tanks pushed forward, insurgent planes bombed government trenches. Fleets of government fighting planes rushed into the battle, engaging the insurgent air squadron. The defenders said the government sent 60 planes into the air against approximately 100 insurgent ships.

(The insurgent offensive also was felt in the Valencia area, where fliers in a sudden raid tonight bombed the government's temporary capital.)

Coincidental with the powerful attack in the Brunete sector, the insurgents battered at the government forces defending Quijorna, Villanueva del Pardillo and the University City sector of Madrid.

Great Drive Expected.

Insurgent troops near Valfarmoso de las Monjas on the Guadalajara front maneuvered to envelop government troops. The government claimed all of these attacks were repulsed.

The concerted attacks seemed to confirm the belief here that insurgents have almost completed their concentrations in preparation for a general offensive to regain ground lost in the government's successful advances west of Madrid recently.

Government spokesmen here said they had reliable information that the insurgents had concentrated 20,000 men at Agamella, 10,000 at Boadilla del Monte and 8,000 at Sevilla la Nueva. The number concentrated in the Sierra sector and north of Guadalajara was believed by the government to be around 150,000.

British Ship Captured.

Meanwhile in London, the British admiralty announced that the British merchant ship Candleston Castle, famous as a blockade runner under the name of "Seven Seas Spray," had been "captured by an insurgent warship inside Spanish territorial waters."

A few hours after the merchantman's capture Saturday morning, the British battleship Royal Oak and the destroyer Basilisk sailed from St. Jean de Luz, France.

The Basilisk had been under orders to leave Spanish waters Saturday night, but at 4:45 p. m. she received sudden orders to sail immediately. Patrols went through the port rounding up her crew, and the destroyer started off in the direction of the Spanish coast at full speed. The Royal Oak left just as suddenly at 8 p. m. Saturday.

Officers at St. Jean de Luz expressed belief these movements were connected with the capture of the Candleston Castle, but in London an admiralty spokesman said, "We see no reason to connect the two events."

At the admiralty it was understood the Candleston Castle was being escorted by insurgent warships to Ferrol, on Spain's northwestern coast.

The Candleston Castle, a vessel of 2,579 tons, as the Seven Seas Spray won fame in April by being the first ship to run the insurgent blockade of Bilbao to carry food supplies to the beleaguered Basque capital.

The vessel's owners in London asserted she had been lying off Santander, only important northern port remaining to the Spanish government, trying to get in to take out refugees. She was said to carry a crew of 23 under Capt. Herbert.

At Valencia, Manuel Azana, president of the Spanish government, marked the beginning of the second year of the civil war with a speech protesting against "invasion of our country by foreign powers."

"Without the aid of foreign powers and with only the men and resources of its first day, the rebellion would have ended some weeks after it started," he said. "But it became a veritable invasion by Germany, Italy and Portugal."

Rebels Celebrate.

Salamanca, Spain, July 18 (AP).—The beginning of the second year of the Spanish civil war today found the insurgents, soldiers and civilians alike, confident that it would end within the year.

Followers of Insurgent Generalissimo Franco are anxious that peace be restored, but they insist peace can mean only one thing, a complete insurgent victory. They believe that will come before another year has passed.

Ex-Convict Is Sought As Strangler of Girl

New York, July 18 (AP).—Police today broadcast an eight-State alarm for Frank Figliolia, 22, in connection with the garroting of Dorothy Tauman, 18, in a lower East Side hotel last Sunday.

The girl, who registered with a swarthy man under an assumed name, was found strangled with one of her silk stockings. Her companion had disappeared. Police said their records showed Figliolia served 18 months in the Elmira, N. Y., reformatory in 1935-36 for third degree assault on the complaint of the girl, who charged him with criminal assault.

accepted verbally the principal demands for a settlement of the Far Eastern crisis.

Both sides indicated an agreement on immediate issues, constituting a new armistice, had been reached.

Authorities agreed, however, that with reinforcements still arriving for the large Japanese force in this area and with the Chinese government at Nanking announcing refusal to approve any local settlement, danger of conflict still persisted.

Japanese officials said Japanese troops would remain in the area between Peiping and the Yungting River until the Chinese had fulfilled all conditions of the agreement.

Trains for Shanhaikwan, on the Manchurian border, brought to Tientsin the second large Japanese troop contingent of the movement into North China. More trains were expected tonight.

Decision Up to Chiang.

Japanese authorities indicated that their total reinforcements, including those already arrived, would be about 12,000 officers and men, to be added to the 7,000 in the Peiping-Tientsin region before the crisis arose.

The Japanese insistence that Nanking withdraw all Central government forces from Hopeh Province—which extends on the southwest 300 miles south of Peiping—was considered to put the question of whether the Tientsin agreement shall be lasting squarely up to Gen. Chiang Kai-Shek, military leader and premier of the Nanking government.

Trustworthy reports from the south indicated there had been no considerable movement of Nanking's own forces toward the northern zone of trouble.

Although Nanking has insisted it will not recognize any capitulation of Northern leaders to Japanese terms, it appeared the Central government had done nothing in a military way to enforce its own will in such a settlement.

in white, then appeared at his house and said simply, "Good morning." The scientist had walked to the farm home. Two hours later he communicated with Mrs. Piccard from Lansing.

Dr. Piccard choked as he described the accident.

"Had some trouble with my balloons," he laughed, "so I took my pistol and killed about a dozen of them. Then I came down."

He carried the pistol to aid in cutting away the balloons during the descent. Earlier he had used the TNT device to cut away the upper half of the balloons. He said he did not release the last cluster of balloons until he had virtually reached the ground.

Neither Dr. Piccard nor members of his radio ground crew were able to explain the failure of the two-way short wave set after only 2½ hours of successful operation. The radio failure and the isolation of the place where he came down had contributed to fears Dr. Piccard's flight ended in disaster and started a widespread search for him when he was unreported several hours after he was expected to come down.

Mrs. Piccard arrived here in mid-afternoon.

Copeland Held Out of Contest For N.Y. Mayor

Will Quit to Avoid Split in Both Parties, It Is Rumored.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, July 18.—Reports Senator Royal S. Copeland will withdraw from the Democratic mayoralty primary in this city circulated widely here over the week-end, as indications spread that both major parties here will be split on the New Deal issue if Copeland remains in the race.

Copeland's earlier statements he would make the race if he was the unanimous choice of the five Tammany borough leaders were the basis for the reports he would withdraw. In Washington it was said the Senator had gone to a seaside resort for the week-end and was not available for comment.

The Tammany division occurred Friday when James J. Dooling, Tammany Hall chieftain, announced Copeland would be the nominee, in the face of selection by the four other borough leaders of Grover A. Whalen, World's Fair head and long-time official greeter of arriving dignitaries here.

Whaler asserted he will make the race purely on local issues, but Copeland's antipathy to the national Administration and the known support by the New Deal of Whalen appeared to make it inevitable national questions would enter the primary campaign.

Republicans unfavorable to the candidacy fo Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia for another term will meet this week to decide their course, with some of them privately in favor of entering Copeland's name in the Republican primary.

It appeared sure LaGuardia will not be the organization candidate, although he already has announced he will enter the primary.

Democrats also will meet this week, Thursday, at which time Copeland's entry into the race will come to a showdown, if, as is possible, it does not flare into open controversy before that time.

Nature Leader Defends Crow As Destroyer of Grasshopper

One Bird Will Eat a Hundred Pests in Single Hour, President of U. S. Association Says; Cites Necessity of Normal Balance.

Arthur Newton Pack, president of the American Nature Association, steps two paces forward and fires a volley in defense of the long-fired-at crow. He holds that when you kill a crow you have affected —to your disadvantage—the prices you will pay for food next winter.

"Grasshoppers destroying farm crops worth millions of dollars while organized drives to kill crows are being conducted presents a strange and ridiculous picture," Pack says.

Painstaking studies of the crow's stomach contents show that in the spring and summer months one-third of the crow's diet consists of insects, with grasshoppers being especially in evidence, he says. And it is nothing for a crow to devour 100 grasshoppers in an hour or two. For additional statistics:

"When a brood of four young crows is found to have eaten more than 400 grashoppers in a few hours you get an idea of the importance of the bird in maintaining Nature's balance," he says. And this should, by inference, give the crow a staff position in the normal granary setup.

A grasshopper-eating record of 143 insects is credited to one crow in a little more than an hour. Of a total of 157 nestling crows taken at random in an area infested with grasshoppers, 151 were found to have fed on grasshoppers.

"In the face of these and many other proved facts, it is difficult to understand the organized warfare against the crow," Pack says. "Several of our Midwestern States have offered prizes for the largest number of feet of dead crows turned in," and gun clubs and other groups are enlisted in the drives, he says, citing further statistics:

"We read that 194,781 crows have been eliminated in Indiana in a contest for awards from the State Department of Conservation. Taking a conservative figure, if each one of those crows ate only 50 grasshoppers a day, they would have eaten 9,713,550 grasshoppers. That is a lot of grasshoppers, and if this figure were multiplied by 15 or 20, representing the duration of the hopper invasion, it would be a lot more grasshoppers.

City Waits Crickets Behind a Tin Wall And Pits of Poison

Sundance, Wyo., July 18 (AP).—Sundance residents threw up a second line of defense today against a crawling, hungry horde of Mormon crickets.

While workmen completed a mile-long tin fence around two sides of this town of 500 population, property owners built similar defense around their homes to protect gardens and lawns. Pits filled with crude oil and poison dust also were prepared to halt the invasion.

In all directions from Sundance more than 1,000,000 acres of range and farm land is infested.

John Hartney, of the State entomology department is directing 100 men in a poison dust war against the migrating insects. He estimated 80 to 90 per cent of the crickets are females, ready to lay eggs.

Lacking funds for tin fences, many ranchers plowed furrows across the path of the insects. Last year their crops were ruined by drought. Others abandoned their crops to the pest.

Credit Threat Seen In U.S. Budget Rise

New York, July 18 (AP).—The Twentieth Century Fund reported tonight that "inflation and possible impairment of United States credit are threatened if costs of Government continue much longer to outrun income."

"Mounting Government deficits were unavoidable during the depression," it was stated, "and the present national debt of more than $36,000,000,000, though unprecedented, is not yet a cause for apprehension.

"But to carry annual Government deficits into a period of recovery would be both dangerous and unnecessary."

The report, based on two years' study, was made by a committee headed by President Oswald Knauth of the Associated Dry Goods Association and including Donald Richberg, former Presidential adviser, and agricultural and labor representatives.

Hitler Swears To Stamp Out 'Evils' in Arts

Opens New Structure, Says He Will Eradicate Old 'Degenerate' Era.

By the Associated Press.

Munich, July 18.—Opening the new "house of German art," Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler today announced his Nazi regime would eradicate ruthlessly the last vestiges of the former "degenerated" in Germany's artistic life.

The chief characteristics of that era, he said, were confusion, distortion, corruption and lack of clearnes. Jewish art criticism, co-operating with Jewish art dealers, had been the chief influence in the old era, the Nazi leader declared.

Hitler said clarity was the keynote of the German artistic spirit.

Worst Art's Exhibition.

The "House of German Art" is a new exhibition building dedicated to furtherance of Nazi cultural ideas. Hitler laid the cornerstone in 1933.

Tomorrow the Nazi regime will open, also in Munich, a display of what it considers Germany's worst paintings and sculptures as a reminder of "Jewish Marxist" influence in pre-Hitler days.

"This exhibition will serve as a warning and an awful example," declared Dr. Paul Joseph Goebbels, minister of propaganda.

Hitler ridiculed cubism, futurism, dadaism and similar trends. He advised any German artist who thinks he has something to say to "express it clearly in his work" and not in silly explanatory phrases. He declared art which cannot be understood without a new vocabulary of phrases and slogans is worthless.

Blames Faulty Eyesight.

It is possible, the Reichsfuehrer went on, that some artists actually see the world as they paint it, but that, he said, is no excuse for calling it art. Such tendencies rather should be a matter for investigation as to "how such pathological defects in eyesight can originate," he said.

Hitler emphasized that the "House of German Art" will be a home for German, not international, art. He described the immense building as "the greatest, proudest, handsomest art exhibition building in the world today."

Introduced by one of the Nazi regime's leaders in Bavaria as "the master of German art," Hitler later observed:

"If I never accomplished more for German art than the erection of this building, it would still be more than all the bunglers of the degenerate era contributed."

Goebbels told the Federal Chamber of Art that tomorrow's showing of "awful examples" of the pre-Nazi period is "designed to make German visitors see with shuddering and horror to what depths art fell in Germany and what great efforts was necessary to find a way out of this chaotic confusion."

Borah to Seek Senate Bolt on Roosevelt Veto

Will Request Action at Once on Farm Loan Interest Measure.

By the Associated Press.

Senator Borah (Republican), Idaho, proposed yesterday the Senate, before resuming its court fight, join the House in overriding President Roosevelt's veto of low interest rates on Federal farm loans.

He served notice he would try to get action when the Senate reconvenes tomorrow.

"The farmers are not yet out of the depression by any means," Borah asserted.

Disregarding Mr. Roosevelt's contention there is "no justification" for "subsidy" interest rates of 3½ or 4 per cent on nearly $3,000,000,000 of loans to farmers, the House voted last Tuesday 260 to 98 to override the veto.

Old Rates Called High.

"It seems to be overlooked," Borah said in a statement, "that if this bill does not pass, these farmers —many of them—will have to go back to the old contract interest rate, which is not 4 per cent as is so often said.

"Many of the loans are at 5 per cent, some of them are 5½ per cent, and some are as high as 6 per cent. The Government is borrowing money at as low as 2½ per cent."

"Notwithstanding better conditions on the farm, owing to the tremendous load which the farmer was carrying by reason of the depression during the last six years, about 150 out of 1,000 farmers are annually losing title to their farms, or more than 250,000 a year."

Big Margin for Bill.

The converted measure went through both branches by big margins last month. It provides for continuing another year the existing 3½ per cent "emergency" rate on approximately $2,000,000,000 of Federal Land Bank loans. A 4 per cent rate then would apply for one year.

In addition it would cut out from 5 to 4 per cent the rate on about $833,000,000 of land band commissioner loans, largely secured by second mortgages.

President Roosevelt said in his veto message the proposals would cost the Treasury about $40,000,000 in the present fiscal year, at a time when he is trying to balance the budget.

Fish Asks if Tax Of Mrs. Roosevelt Had Secret Ruling

By the Associated Press.

Representative Fish (Republican), New York, asked Secretary Morgenthau yesterday if the Treasury had ruled Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt does not have to report for income tax purposes the proceeds of her charity broadcasts.

Fish also inquired, in a letter, if such a ruling had been made public and if the Treasury "still approves of such a ruling?"

Robert H. Jackson, Assistant Attorney General, said recently the Internal Revenue Bureau had held Mrs. Roosevelt need not report money received from broadcasts, since it is turned over to a charitsince it is turned over to a charitable institution.

"If such ruling exists?" Fish wrote Morgenthau, "what is there to prevent business men from taking one day out of each week's earnings and giving it to charity without having to report it as income? . . . Would not the ruling of Mr. Jackson, if applied equally to all donors of charity, permit assignment of income that would defeat the Government in the collection of much needed taxes?" . . .

Unfinished Business.

A great deal of important unfinished business is entered on the legislative calendar of Congress. Indeed it would be more correct to say that only routine and comparatively unimportant business has so far been disposed of.

The reorganization program is held up, and undoubtedly many of the President's faithful supporters hope that it will remain in a state of suspense. A bill for Federal regulation of wages and hours has been reported out by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, but that is the extent of its progress.

The housing program appears to have been tossed about by expert consultants, who are unable to agree upon a compromise plan, until it is very doubtful whether anything can be done with it at this session. The President's proposal to set up a number of power agencies similar to the TVA, covering the entire country, has also been pushed aside. The loopholes in the income tax laws are as yet unplugged, and Secretary Wallace's ever-normal granary is still only a cherished dream.

It would be most unfortunate for Congress to try to legislate on so many subjects of great complexity and long-range importance at this session. There is no emergency calling for immediate action in any of the cases cited. On the contrary, as Senator Vandenberg pointed out some time ago, Congress is still suffering from an acute attack of mental indigestion caused by too large doses of unfamiliar legislative panaceas. Before proceeding with new experiments in regulatory labor laws, for instance, it ought to consider how to improve the Wagner act. Before creating more TVA's, it should insist upon a clear statement of the ultimate objectives of the Administration's power program.

Even if Congress were in a mood for studious consideration of the major items of unfinished business, it could not deal with them adequately in the midst of a crowded session. Under present conditions it seems unlikely that much will be accomplished in a legislative way after the battle over the court bill has ended. Of course, there are a number of necessary appropriation bills not yet enacted, and it is hoped that some decent provision will be made for covering the District deficit.

Two More Powers Join.

British diplomacy has scored another, if minor, success in persuading Germany and Soviet Russia to accept the provisions of the London naval agreement of 1936.

Up to now the only powers adhering to that pact, which represents all that could be salvaged from the Washington and London naval limitation agreements of 1922 and 1930, have been Great Britain, the United States and France. Not long ago Japan again manifested its unwillingness to have anything to do with the 1936 pact by refusing to abide by the 14-inch gun limit stipulated in that treaty. As a result, the Navy Department has found it necessary to equip the two American capital ships now under construction with guns of 16-inch caliber. And, what is more serious, it began to look as if qualitative limitation, as provided for in the 1936 treaty, would go the way of quantitative limitation so that, before long, no restrictions of any kind would bar the way to a race in naval armaments in which the sky would be the limit.

The Anglo-German and Anglo-Russian naval treaties, just signed, will tend to curb such pessimism. Not three but five powers are now pledged to adhere to the broad qualitative limitations embodied in the London pact. This means that among these powers, barring any unforseen action by outsiders such as Japan or Italy, the present tonnage and armaments limits for the various types of capital ships, aircraft carriers, cruisers, etc., will be maintained and, furthermore, that each of the signatory nations will inform the others of its prospective building programs some months before they are undertaken.

Two concessions have been made to the new signatories. Great Britain, no doubt with the knowledge and consent of the United States and France, has agreed to permit the Soviet Union and Germany to build a certain number of cruisers in the 8,000-10,000-ton class, although as between themselves the three original signatories declared a six-year holiday last year on the building of this type of fighting ships. Russia is also given the right to keep secret information regarding ships it has under construction or in commission in Far Eastern waters, a circumstance which may put added pressure on Japan to become a party to the London agreement. Should that happen, a new start might be made to revive the efforts to achieve quantitative limitation, the outlook for which has been very dark indeed.

Dynamic Planning.

Economic theorists frequently qualify their most weighty generalizations by adding "other things remaining the same." In other words, they assume for purposes of their argument, that society is relatively static. Thus they are enabled to examine the effect of specific economic changes in isolation without making allowance for the fact that an organized society is highly dynamic and infinitely complex. The abstract conclusions based upon such unreal premises are useful if we recognize their limitations. They become barriers to an intelligent grasp of our economic and social problems, however, if we forget that life is a never-ending process of adaptation.

The present generation of Americans no longer believes that a free competitive system will automatically correct the maladjustments caused by new scientific discoveries, new inventions and the march of time. Nevertheless, the economic "truths" developed by inductive reasoning and applicable only to a static, laissez faire economic society have unconsciously moulded our present day thinking along rather unrealistic lines that foster an easy optimism.

While we fully realize that social and economic institutions are in a state of perpetual flux, we are still inclined to assume that the transition from a familiar present to an unknown future can be made without any great shock to the economic organism. We are, for instance, apt to minimize the seriousness of the problems of unemployment resulting from the introduction of labor-saving machinery, by pointing to the jobs created by the growth of wealth and the diversification of products.

Although our complacency has been severely shaken in recent years by the evils of depression, very little thought has been given to the questions raised by the National Resources Committee in its latest report on "Technological Trends and Their Social Implications." This important document covers an extensive range of subjects, as the title indicates. It is not concerned solely with the effect of technical changes upon jobs and investments, but with their far-reaching social consequences as well. The report carries a very special warning to those economic experts who make plans for the guidance of our farm and industrial populations without allowance for the social and cultural metamorphoses that are certain to be wrought by scientific discoveries giving rise to new inventions or adding to the serviceability of old ones.

No human mind can envisage the course of future developments, to be sure, but the National Resources Committee has performed a timely service in directing attention to some of the outstanding inventions that are virtually certain to have a far-reaching influence upon the economic and social life of tomorrow. For example, it is time to begin considering the probable consequences of the general replacement of field labor by an automatic cotton picker, the effects of television, of the introduction of new synthetic products, as well as a host of other inventions.

If the country is forewarned, it will be much easier to make the readjustments required by technological advances. To a large extent, indeed, scientific research and the inventions that grow out of scientific discoveries can be systematized and adapted to the needs of the time. Some inventions will always spring into being by accident but others come in response to demand. A good many serious questions arise as to the best time and the best methods of utilizing these new devices and new processes. We want to enjoy the fruits of discovery and invention to the full. But we should avoid too precipitate abandonment of old methods, which would cause serious industrial dislocations and unduly heavy capital losses.

These and other problems call for continuous study as recommended in the report of the National Resources Committee. It suggests that such surveys should be carried on for the Government by interdepartmental groups and science committees, with a permanent National Resources Board co-ordinating the activities of numerous local planning boards. While these seers of science would undoubtedly make many false prophecies, they would save us from worse blunders that result from too exclusive absorption in the problems of the present.

No Balm In Gilead.

Bicuspids and not bathing beauties occupied the spotlight last week in Atlantic City. The American Dental Association, in annual convention there, went into a huddle over the announcement that at last a real pain killer for pulling and repairing teeth has been discovered. No more cocaine; no more novocaine, and no more carryings-on is the toothsome morsel held out at the convention by Drs. Harold A. Osserman and Abraham Taub of New York City.

Surely no man ever lived with soul so dead who never to himself hath said, "I hate to go to the dentist." And now, thanks to these molar medics from Manhattan, it looks as if all this agonizing business were on its way out, along with the tooth. For the man in white will in future simply apply the new desensitizer directly to the dentine, leave it on for three minutes and then begin to drill. The cost of application is estimated at about 1 cent per tooth. But what price any anesthetic if it promises to eliminate the old Spartan act of bracing and bearing.

The inevitable rub comes when it is learned that this newest pain-killer is not yet guaranteed in all cases. While it has been "100 per cent effective" in 80 per cent of the cases so far, it was "totally ineffective" in 4 per cent. Utopia is not yet reached. For how is anyone going to know, until it's too late, whether or not he is one of the 4 per cent?

Politics In Old Gotham.

From time to time the citizens of New York, disgusted with the corruption and maladministration which has normally characterized the rule of the city by Tammany Hall, have arisen in their wrath and smitten the Tammany Tiger hip and thigh. But that voracious denizen of the political jungle has always managed to stage a comeback. The wounds it has received from good government movements and reform administrations have never proved fatal, or even lasting. Indeed, no reform government has ever succeeded itself in New York.

Is history now about to reverse itself? In 1934 a fusion movement swept Fiorello LaGuardia into the Mayor's seat. Since then municipal administration in New York has greatly improved. So much so that many conservative Republicans, though decidedly out of sympathy with LaGuardia's New Deal proclivities and distinctly displeased by some of his more flamboyant utterances, regard him as the only logical candidate for their party. Recently 1,000 Republicans approached the Mayor and asked him to run again. This he greed to do, although many other Republicans look askance at his prospective candidacy and would prefer to align themselves under the banner of a more typical representative of their party.

But this split in Republican ranks is equaled, and possibly exceeded, by the split which is developing in Democratic ranks. In an effort to restore its shattered fortunes, already weakened by the continuous exodus from its great stronghold, Manhattan, and the building up of independent Democratic organizations in the other boroughs, Tammany Hall sought to draft its outstanding member, Senator Robert F. Wagner. But the move failed. Wagner spoke eloquently of Tammany's contributions to social welfare and its sponsorship and support of its enlightened legislation, but beyond giving this sop to Cerberus he would not budge. Dr. Royal S. Copeland, the other Senator from New York, has agreed to fill the breach, however. In the forthcoming primaries he will be the candidate of the Wigwam.

No sooner was this decision announced than the Democratic bosses of the Bronx, Queens and Richmond announced that they would throw their support in the primaries to Grover A. Whalen, former commissioner of police and for the past year president of the World's Fair Corporation. Since he will be backed by those Democratic elements supporting President Roosevelt, with whom both Tammany Hall and Senator Copeland are at odds, this fight will test the strength of the National Administration in New York City as well as of the popularity of the opposing candidates.

To complicate an already tangled situation, there is a third Democratic candidate backed by a dissident wing of Tammany Hall. He is Samuel Levy, borough president of Manhattan.

Wee Beastie.

This much may be said for sea serpents—they never break out in the same place twice and no two of them ever exhibit the same proclivities. Without glamour or streamlining, they manage to grab as much newspaper space as any star in Hollywood. Perhaps that's because the spice of life is variety and monotonous is one adjective which has never been associated with them.

The Loch Ness critter which appeared over three years ago merely flailed around in the water. Some six months later a sporting sea serpent came up to nearby Patapsco River just for the swim. Then the Michigan monster took the spotlight, being lauded especially for his gentle traits. But alas the Scottish serpent was apparently just a chamber of commerce dream. The Patapsco puzzler never really once reared his ugly head. Dreariest denouement of all was when the pride of Michigan turned out to be a wooden image.

Undaunted, in spite of these disillusioning facts, residents of Newport, Ark., now report the appearance of another monster, believed to have invaded the deep eddies of the White River from the Gulf of Mexico. Like the others, he is a sea-going model, with a here-today-gone-tomorrow attitude, and he has an estimated weight of 600 to 1,500 pounds. But this one, by cricket, blows bubbles! Of course, this might mean that it is an infant Ichthyosaurus. Or it may be, perish the thought, that smaller models are the mode now, in which case seamen may look forward to being frightened by cute Cadborosauruses.

"Red-headed women aren't any meaner than any other kind," according to a University of Texas professor. Read-headed women have been damned often and much, but this seems to be the first time it has been done with faint praise.

The President's Plan.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is to be regretted that the President cannot devise a more equitable plan to reduce the cost of social services than "not to fill vacancies as they occur." Annually thousands of vacancies occur through death, retirement or resignation and unless these vacancies are refilled the work must be left undone which would indicate the work was unnecessary or be done by speeding up or overtime on the part of others in the service. The President's policy, carried to its logical conclusion, will increase the number of unemployed unless absorbed by non-Federal organizations.

Thousands of youths are annually graduated from colleges and universities with little hope of finding suitable employment while the civil service is packed with wartime employes, with little education and less intelligence, with salaries from two to five times what they could command in commercial service. In 1924 this writer was doing work in grade 3 at $1,500 per annum which work has since been assigned to grade 7 at a salary of $2,700 and not one of the clerks has more than a high-school education. ### Pot And Kettle.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: When Mr. Roosevelt wrote his letter to Congress rebuking the Senators for "taking advantage" of the death of Senator Robinson to further their opposition to his court plan and adding that he "had hoped they would refrain from this through respect to the memory of the leader, why did he "take advantage" of this letter to add that the "passage of his plan was necessary" for the enactment of necessary legislation?

To our minds this is a clear case of the pot calling the kettle black.

Appreciation

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: We extend our appreciation and gratitude to The Post for the fine service which it rendered toward the repeal of section 213. For the sweeping victory in the House of Representatives, we believe much credit is due to the unfailing support of The Post.

That you will keep up your support until we have final passage in the Senate, we sincerely hope.

Taxi Policy.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial of July 14 dealing with "Insurance for Taxis" is an indication of editorial commitment on a subject little understood by its writer.

The Industrial Brotherhood of Taxi Drivers which supported the strike action of a goodly proportion of taxi drivers in the District, is not opposed to a liability insurance bill. On the contrary, it has urged legislation which would assure the public of a protection to which it is entitled. Such a bill, to have real meaning, would have to protect the taxi driver as well as the public. To support, as you have done, Representative Nichols' contention that the present bill as approved by Congress will effect limitation of cabs also, is to support one of the most vicious assaults upon the already precarious living standard of the Washington taxi driver.

The present liability insurance bill will eliminate the "financially irresponsible" cab owner, by imposing upon him a form of slavery which will be impossible to withstand. With no separate cab limitation bill to check the horrendous competition which now prevails, and with no effort made to inject some order into the confusion of the taxi industry, of course the independent taxi driver will be made "financially irresponsible." The present liability insurance bill, if it becomes law, will create a cab monopoly in the District within two years. The independent operator will be reduced to a rental driver and, together with the rental driver, will find himself at the mercy of the companyized associations.

The only legitimate solution to this problem, in the interest of the overwhelming majority of cab drivers, independent and rental drivers, is, first to pass a bill for cab limitation by the control of identification cards, and then a liability insurance bill for the protection of the public as well as the taxi driver. This is the policy of the Industrial Brotherhood of Taxi Drivers in the present situation, and it will continue its fight for the realization of that policy.

Executive chairman, Industrial Brotherhood of Taxi Drivers,

Bank Liquidations.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I notice in The Post that Comptroller O'Connor of the Treasury has his periodic statement of what he is doing in the matter of liquidating banks in the United States. On the face of it the average person is inclined to the idea that the New Deal is doing some wonderful work in performing this liquidation, but the actual facts are that millions of dollars in hard earned money of hundreds of thousands of depositors have been taken from such depositors by the government's enforced liquidations. In Atlantic City and Ocean City, for example, depositors are just getting their initial dividends—five cents on the dollar with small prospect of much more! Is that what the New Deal calls efficient liquidation?

I know of assets whose actual cost was more than $150,000 that were sold for less than $10,000 by an Atlantic City bank, and this is not an unusual transaction with Government receivers liquidating. On the other hand the Comptroller has "deserving" Democrats holding down these jobs of receivers now for the past five years at an annual salary of $7,500! And the money that has been disbursed to friendly Democratic counselors, affiliated with Democratic machines, has been plenty!

All of which goes to prove that behind the Comptroller's periodic bank liquidation reports lies a story of heartaches and financial disaster that is one of the most sorrowful tales of New Deal manipulation. No wonder the Treasury Department keeps the actual facts surrounded with the greatest of secrecy! HARRY L. HAWES.

Analysis Of Communism.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A recent letter by Mr. C. M. Paine to The Post extolled the "worker's democracy" in the U. S. S. R. In it he voiced his displeasure of fascism and indirectly called attention to economic abuses in this country, both criticisms have their merits. But nothing was more rashly stated than the phrase "communism spells emancipation."

To function at all, communism is forced to subject the individual mind to that of the State. Like fascism and extreme nationalism it defies the state. Without restrictions on its own authority, it arrogates to itself unreasonable and dictatorial powers. It attacks a fundamental law of nature—that society is for man, not man for society. Its ethics are those of expediency and compulsion. Emancipation or freedom in a collectivized and coerced state is simply illogical.

America is not faced with the sole choice of capitalism or communism. Its democratic charters and institutions of government are sufficiently flexible to permit much-needed readjustments. But a Christian perception of the basic moral laws that must govern this readjustment is always to be emphasized. These same underlying precepts are discarded by atheistic communism.
JOHN J. PHILIPPSEN.

The Labor Front.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The developments in the labor front during the last several months give cause for the most solemn deliberation on the part of American citizens who reverence the basic principles of liberty upon which our Government was founded. The most alarming feature of the entire situation is the absolute failure of law enforcement in at least two States; this with the apparent approval of the Administration at Washington.

Westbrook Pegler, in his account of his interview with John L. Lewis, summed up the labor situation today in this final significant paragraph:

He (John L. Lewis) is a very tough man, and I predict that there will be more bloodshed for and against a free man's constitutional right to stay out of a union and retain his right to earn a living than all other issues put together.

A crisis is developing which cannot be dismissed or prevented by a mere wisecrack on the part of any executive derelict in his sworn duty.
A. S. BROWN.

Reactions to Senator Robinson's Death

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The death of Senator Robinson, chief advocate of Roosevelt's court packing scheme, indicates that the Divine Power which spread the fogs to cover the movements of the hard pressed colonial army of the Revolution is still guarding the three-pillared edifice which those heroes built.

May that Supreme Power long guard that edifice, is the prayer of one who long marched beneath its colors. J. D. KLEIN,
East Falls Church, Va., July 15.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: All this loose and specious talk, ascribed to Senator Wheeler and extravagantly amplified and broadcast by a news commentator respecting the claimed "intervention of deity" in the Supreme Court contest now before the Congress is not only puerile tommy-rot, but amounts to an impious profanation of hallowed things near to the Christian heart.

The unholy assumption of the alliance of the Supreme Being, in the remotest way, with the pitiless group of predatory monsters is little short of sacrilege. N. V. WADE, Washington, July 16.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I was quite amused at a statement issued by Senator Royal S. Copeland, of New York, relative to Congress being a death trap. The Nation deeply mourned the passing of Senator Robinson and deepest sympathy, I know, goes out to those left behind, but to make such an accusation as Copeland's is looked upon by the most of us as outright preposterous.

If Congress is a death trap what about the iron and steel mines where thousands of laborers sweat in order to receive a comparatively small compensation? What about the women and small children, frail as they are, who bend over weaving machines for 10 and 11 hours a day in order to earn a few dollars with which to buy bread and shoes? What about the farmer who toils under a blazing sun for 12 and 14 hours in order to get 3 or 4 cents for a quart of milk? What about the average white collar worker who works 10 hours a day for $15 a week and if he's lucky might get a week off in 52 with pay?

This sort of thing is quite a contrast to our fine legislators, who lean back in their plush chairs in their luxuriously appointed offices with two or three secretaries to do the work, earn $10,000 a year and then rarely get the work done. Ah, yes this is quite a contrast. Right up on Capitol Hill now the two most important pieces of legislation since the days of reconstruction are pending action by the Congress. Do they act? No, but dilly-dally aroud while millions are in need of the very things which these measures intend to give. So Congress is a death trap, eh, well it might be for those who are depending on it helping them.

Oh yes, I forgot the five-month vacation our fine legislators get every year with pay and expenses paid.

America Has A Club For It

THE GUILD of Former Pipe Organ Pumpers is the result of an article Chet Shafer, Michigan journalist, wrote in 1925, recalling the experiences of many small boys like himself whose weekly chore it was to sweat and grunt in the organ loft, and suggesting that there ought to be an organization to preserve the traditions and memories of this forgotten craft. Immediately letters began pouring in from men who had pumped organs in their youth, among them Julius Rosenwald, Will Hays, Myron T. Herrick, and Tony Sarg.

The Guild adopted as its motto, "Pump for the Wind Is Fleeting." By 1930 there were 1,000 members and they were meeting to hear Julius Rosenwald play hymns and speak on "My First Pair of Double-Seated Bicycle Pants."

The Guild fittingly set about to direct public attention to the lost cause of the organ pumper, but it has been far from inactive in other lines. It early recognized that the mementoes of pre-war America are fast disappearing. Hence a committee was named to supervise a campaign for "the conservation of tame cast-iron animal life which abounded on the front lawns of the 80s and 90s, but which is now virtually extinct, due to the ravages of unfeeling junk buyers." Another committee has for its goal "the preservation of wooden dapple-gray horses that used to stand out in front of harness shops." A conch shell in every home is another emblazoned purpose, and the Guild is now considering a project for the restoration of the old-fashioned calliope and the former pronunciation of calliope.

A reporter's yarn back in 1929, to the effect that Police Chief Beller and his cronies had held a "liar's contest" to decide the championship of Burlington, Wisc., led to the founding of the Burlington Liars' Club. The Associated Press took up the tale, letters began to come in, and, though the club has never asked anyone to join, membership now totals around 40,000, scattered all over the world.

Anyone is eligible who sends in ten cents to cover the cost of a membership card and postage, and an original and outstanding lie such as "a man put his shoes on the wrong feet and when he turned a corner his shoes crossed and he broke both legs." The club's World Championship Contests each New Year's Day are broadcast over a Nation-wide hook-up, and the club is featured on the weekly program, "Listen to This."

An Alabama newspaper once mourned that Alabama apparently hadn't any liars, since it was the only State not represented in the Liars' Club. The club forthwith sent the editor responsible for the item a life membership. Occasionally the club has its troubles—when it filed its application to incorporate itself, the secretary of state returned the papers, with the query, "Do you really mean it, or is it just one of your darn lies?"

The Society for the Prevention of Calling Sleeping Car Porters "George" was conceived in 1916 as a joke by Chicago lumberman-banker, George William Dulaney, jr., but by now the society has accommulated 30,000 members whose names include George, and has cost the founder $6,000.

The Society's president is Georgia's Senator Walter Franklin George, and his fellow officers are Vice President George Arliss, Poet Laureate George Ade, Lyricist George M. Cohan, Steward King George II of Greece, Sergeant at Arms George Herman ("Babe") Ruth; Patron Saints, George Washington and George Dewey.

All members carry an embossed card with the pledge: "To always refrain from calling any sleeping car porter 'George' and to discourage this form of address on the part of others."

Mr. Dulany feels that the number of times porters are actually addressed as George has been materially reduced, and he points with pride to the signs placed in many Pullman cars giving the porter's real name.

The first annual dinner of the Benevolent and Protective and Completely Universal Order of Fred Smiths of America was held recently in New York, with 50 members present, ranging from a filling station attendant to the headmaster of an exclusive boys' school. Smythes and Schmitzes were barred, but there was one notable exception: Smith Frederick, who backed into the banquet hall and ate out of his lap with his back to the table. Since the dinner, membership has become Nation-wide, numbers 1,000, and is expanding weekly.

The chief purpose of the organization is "to aid and assuage James A. Farley's unstayed couriers in their appointed rounds in the proper, scientific distribution of mail addressed to members of the organizatoin, and likewise to assist, console and further employes of the American Railway Express and other agents of delivery in the faithful forwarding of packages."

The Postilion

Impressions of Omaha, Nebraska.

OMAHA, NEBR., July 16.—Omaha isn't a country town. It has a population of more than 200,000. Nevertheless, you realize after you've been there for a few hours that there is something about it which sets it apart from the other cities you've visited. There is a casual, easy tempo which pervades its streets and its business, and you finally diagnose it as "Western."

TOM McCARTHY.

Nobody hurries in Omaha. The buses and street cars will wait while you rearrange your packages before boarding. As you pay your fare, you're likely to be greeted with a friendly "Howdy do," and if you're on the streets early enough you'll be greeted with a "G'morning," by perfect strangers.

But if a mere hint of the casual friendliness of the West can be found in the center of the city, concrete evidence of it can be found over in South Omaha, at the Union Stockyards. "Casual" is scarcely the word for what goes on over there. Along with the Union Pacific Railroad, the stockyards are responsible for Omaha's present existence. There, in a tangled jungle of livestock pens, $125,000,000 worth of business is transacted in a year's time, on purely oral contract!

• • • •

I ASKED Harry Bothmer, of the Omaha World-Herald, how they could transact that amount of business without a name being signed to a contract. His answer was simple enough, but, to the stranger, somewhat amazing.

"When a man does business here," Harry told me, "he's accepted as a straight, honest man . . . until he proves himself to be something different. If his word isn't as good as his bond, he doesn't last!"

If he can't be trusted, "he doesn't last." That's the explanation for that tremendous volume of business, transacted, without controversy, on purely oral contract.

The Union Stockyards Company, of Omaha, which houses the livestock exchange, has witnessed a lot of changes in the 53 years of its existence, but the buyers still ride from pen to pen, on horseback, sheltering their eyes with huge sombreros, and sporting boots that would have made Buffalo Bill envious. As they arrive at their offices in the morning, the buyers for the packers, and the buyers on order, may look very much like average businessmen. They drive over a newly constructed ramp above the cattle pens, and enter an 11-story building which would do credit to any city block. But when they emerge for the morning's work they could well pass for a representative group of cowboys fresh from the range.

• • • •

THERE'S A BIT of romance and a lot of paradox in the stockyards at Omaha, and you begin to see some of the latter when you drive over that ramp, toward the Exchange Building. In the midst of 400 acres, surrounded by corraled and bellowing cattle, the exchange rises its 11 stories, looking as though it had been snatched from some business street and planted prankishly in the midst of a nightmare maze of wooden fences.

The building houses 65 commission firms, and each firm has a corresponding group of livestock pens wherein the real business is transacted. Ranchers, and small farmers alike, send their cattle, sheep or hogs to their favorite commission firm. Then the commission men endeavor to sell them at the instructed price to the various buyers in the exchange. By 8 o'clock in the morning the business day has begun, and men whose purchases and sales run into the thousands every week file from the building in cowboy boots and overalls. The commission men lounge by their pens, and the buyers ride past on horseback.

Business amounting to $10,000,000 a month is carried on with the easy informality of a county fair.

"Hey, Billy," a commission man calls out, "I've got something you could use."

The buyer grins and rides over to the pen. The door is thrown open, and he rides in among the pink-nosed, bawling cattle, which plunge in terror away from his oncoming horse. The buyer sits quietly in the maelstrom of surging cattle. To move them away from his horse, he occasionally touches them with the whip he carries; or, in defiance of exchange rules, with the taped end of a cane.

• • • •

"HOW MUCH, JOHN?" he asks, if interested.

The commission man names a price above that for which he has been instructed to sell.

The buyer, also, has his instructions and, as he eyes the sleek cattle, he mentally figures the weight, the amount of fat, the percentage of high-priced cuts, the price the public will pay for the beef, and the worth of the by-products. These buyers know their business. Without so much as putting a hand on the cattle, many of them can judge the weight within ten pounds. They can literally visualize beneath those shining hides the number of round steaks and sirloins.

Quietly the buyer and seller argue price and, when settlement has been made, one or the other says, "O. K." or "All right, John," and a deal running into hundreds or thousands of dollars has been consummated. The cattle are then driven to one of the ten or a dozen scales about the yards, and the receipt from the weight master is taken as the base upon which the agreed price is to be paid.

A bill is made out for the amount involved in the informal contract and turned into the exchange clearing house. The buyer finds the bill in his box, returns his check to the clearing house and, at the end of the day, the seller has his money.

• • • •

FOR 53 YEARS this business by "gentlemen's agreement" has been sufficiently effective to dispose of livestock from 19 States, to the extent of 60,000,000 head of cattle, 120,000,000 hogs, and nearly 100,000,000 sheep. Up until a few years ago, Omaha's yards were second only to Chicago, but the drought and its effect on livestock plunged it into third place.

When Harry Bothmer showed me through the yards he explained that it wasn't a very busy day, but it seemed sufficiently busy to me, as the air rocked with the bellowing of cattle and the lanes filled and emptied of excited Short Horns and Herefords. It took me some time to get used to finding a quiet stroll between the pens interrupted by the thunder of an approaching herd of cattle. The interruption was very real. When the cattle had stomped over the ground on which I had but recently been standing, I would descend from my perch on the fence, rather shamefacedly. Harry assured me, however, that it was only common sense to get out of the way of the cattle, because they weren't so likely to get out of ours.

I asked Harry if there was any reason why the yards were comparatively quiet on the day of my visit, and he told me that the real season for the existence of that exchange is in the fall. It seems that when the summer heat sends Mr. and Mrs. America to its glasses of iced tea and cool salads, that dietary change is felt in the markets of Chicago, St. Louis and Omaha. Then, too, the fall is the proper time for cattle raisers to dispose of their stock before the onset of winter covers the grazing lands.

Not only are the seasons known to have a very definite effect on meat consumption, but public taste changes as well. The cattle men can tell you just which cities prefer their meats fat, which cities prefer them lean. The people of Boston like their beefsteaks thick and heavy, and the people of Washington, who used to be in this class, have now . . . for some mysterious reason . . . gone in for lighter cuts. The men at the yards couldn't explain it, and Harry couldn't explain it.

Spain, France And Germany

Paris Correspondent Finds Myopia In Nazi Eyes.

By Europax.

Special Correspondent to The Post.

Paris.

THE LATEST international flare-up over Spain throws an uncomfortably clear light on certain acute aspects of Europe's perennial crisis. In particular, it reveals the rather negative—yet precariously vital—role played by France at the moment in the problem of European peace or war.

It is difficult, for instance, to escape the conclusion that there was more than mere coincidence in the fact that the "stethoscopic" torpedoing of the Leipzig—which precipitated the recent crisis by bringing about the withdrawal of Germany and Italy from the naval control scheme—followed so closely upon the fall of the Blum cabinet. There are, in fact, serious reasons for believing that Herr Hitler's sudden decision to inflate the alleged attack on the Leipzig into an international incident was closely linked with Berlin's conviction that France's governmental crisis would be long and paralyzing, and in all probability accompanied by disorder and social troubles.

A day or two before the resignation of Premier Leon Blum I had a long conversation with a certain German resident of Paris whose duty, as I happen to know, is to keep the Wilhelmstrasse informed, in advance if possible, of the political situation in France and especially the probable reactions of public opinion to these political events. This German acquaintance did not attempt to conceal his firm conviction that the government's fall would surely be followed, either immediately or before very long, by grave social disturbances which, he said, would, of course, tend to paralyze France's activity abroad for some time. This conviction he had communicated to Berlin.

Nazi Officialdom Dure Of France's End.

HAVING JUST returned a few days previously from Germany, I could all too easily picture the effect of quasi-official dispatches of this sort. For in Berlin I found Nazi officialdom blithely, unshakably sure of one thing: that France is finished internationally, that she is a negligible factor in Europe today; that the French republic is on the verge of red revolution or of civil war; that the reoccupation of the Rhineland by German troops in March of last year reduced France once and for all to the rank of a second-rate power.

This comes very close to sounding silly; yet actually it is almost an understatement of the attitude prevailing among many of those Nazi leaders who, with Hitler himself, are responsible for framing Germany's foreign policy. Clearly the German reports of France's death or approaching demise have been, like those of Mark Twain's "greatly exaggerated."

Not that they are entirely without foundation, of course. It cannot be seriously contested that on March 7, 1936, when Herr Hitler, with his fingers fearfully crossed, sent his troops marching into the Rhineland and got away with it, France's diplomatic standing as a forceful factor in European politics dropped sharply and suddenly. With the demilitraized zone remilitarized and fortified, French potentialities of intervening quickly in central Europe were very considerably decreased.

Furthermore, there is no point in ignoring the obvious fact that class hatred and social unrest are intense in France these days. The possibility of civil strife cannot be entirely out of the picture.

France Will Unite When Invaders Threaten.

BUT WHAT Germany seems unable to grasp is that the one thing which would unite, unify and galvanize into a single formidable sword the whole French nation is the threat of foreign invasion. Yet the Reich has had several reminders of this fact. Last January, when Germany quietly but imprudently pushed her preparations to occupy Spanish Morocco a bit too openly, France snapped instantaneously out of its apparently bitter divergencies over the Spanish conflict and stiffened into a bristling ramrod of resistance that ran unbroken through the whole gamut of political nuances from the Royalists on the extreme right to the communists on the extreme left.

The same thing happened in a degree over the question of naval control and non-intervention. Sensing confusedly but surely that Germany and Italy must be checked before they have intrenched themselves in Spain so deeply as to become a direct threat to French security, the whole country—at least all of it that is vocal—ranged itself solidly behind Delbos in his firm stand at London. The bluff of the "nationalist international" was called, at least in part and provisionally.

Perhaps the most significant thing about these two incidents is that the initiative for a resolute stand against the exaggeration of Germany and Italy came from France—not England. In the first instance at least, France acted — sending a battle squadron to Morocco—without even awaiting for Britain's opinion on the matter. Can it be that France is not so slavishly tied to English apron-strings as Rome and Berlin seem to think?

For after all, the crucial question for European peace is not likely, in the long run, to be the Spanish Civil War. Explosive as it is, Spain, says an old proverb, is only the tail of Europe, though it is the head of Africa.

Central Europe's Fate Not Important To Britain.

CENTRAL EUROPE, on the other hand, and Czechoslovakia, in particular, is the very heart of the continent. Furthermore, Hitler and Mussolini both must know that Britain would certainly fight for Gibraltar, and France, to protect her lines of communication with North Africa. In the face of such certain and united resistance, the two dictators are unlikely to goad British and French forbearance in Spain much further.

But Czechoslovakia is a different matter. Here France's vital interests seem less directly menaced, Britain's not even indirectly. Hitler, beyond question, wonders whether he could once again "get away with it"—with a "coup" of some sort that would bring Czechoslovakia—and therefore central Europe—under German control.

It is this eastward ambition of Germany—the same old "Drang nach Osten"—that constitutes perhaps the greatest peril to world peace. And it is this pan-Germanic expansion that renders dangerous the Reich's scorn of France. Convinced that France either would not or could not intervene, Herr Hitler might be tempted to make an Ethiopia, or a second Spain, out of Czechoslovakia, only to find too late that France would intervene and that a general European conflict had been precipitated.

But would France really go to war with Germany over Czechoslovakia? It is not an easy question to answer. Much would depend, of course, on circumstances, on what Britain's attitude was, on the nature of the aggression. What can be stated, however, is that Germany is wrong in figuring, as she seems to be doing today, that the hypothesis of French intervention can be virtually ignored.

Daladier Has Declared France Would Aid Czechs.

M. EDOUARD DALADIER, French Minister of War, when asked unofficially whether France would intervene if Germany were to attack Czechoslovakia, replied very emphatically, yes. Asked what form this intervention would take, he indicated France would mobilize at once and march against Germany.

This attitude of Daladier is significant, but it is not necessarily final. In the first place the decision would not rest with the ministry of war alone, and the general staff is known to be very reluctant to move against Germany unless assured of the immediate assistance of England—as was clearly proved in the case of the Rhineland, when the general staff counsels of moderation prevailed over the more belligerent ideas of several cabinet members.

What would be Britain's attitude? Almost certainly, England could be counted upon to temporize, to carry the issue before the League Council at Geneva, and to restrain France, if possible, from taking things into her own hands. For to England, it would obviously appear less of an evil for Germany to obtain control of Czechoslovakia than for there to be a general European or even world war.

The French, naturally, do not look at things in quite the same way. No Frenchman wants to go to war for the Czechs or the Slovaks, of course; but most Frenchmen have a strong, almost instinctive, feeling that perhaps it would be better to "have it out with those Germans while we've still got some allies left in central Europe to help us, rather than wait and have to fight an enlarged Germany, all alone later."

Attitude Of France Hinges On Hitler's Move.

THUS IT IS very probable that France's action in the last resort, would depend on the form taken by Germany's eastward expansion.

If Hitler would rest content with economic penetration of central Europe and claim, in return, no more than "spheres of influence" without attempting to abolish frontiers or outwardly dominate through the instigation of Nazi regimes, then there is very little liklihood of France's opposition taking violent form.

If, on the other hand, Germany were to attempt the annexation, either open or disguised, of Czechoslovakia, even that western part of it where most of the German minority resides, then Hitler, if he counted on a passive, dilatory France, would be taking the gravest risks of plunging the world into chaos and war. A clear and forceful statement of this fact, if it could be presented to the leaders of Nazi Germany today, might do much for the maintenance of peace.

FTC Approves Sales Discount

By the Associated Press.

The Federal Trade Commission said yesterday it had decided that companies can give discounts to big customers based on the difference in cost of selling to large and small customers.

In the first decisions under the new Robinson-Patman act outlawing certain price discriminations, the commission dismissed a case involving special discounts which Montgomery Ward & Co., of Chicago, received on felt-base floor coverings from Bird & Son and the Bird Floor Covering Sales Corporation, of East Walpole, Mass.

Although other Bird customers paid more for the floor coverings than Montgomery Ward, the commission said the prices were not discriminatory because "the cost of selling to Montgomery Ward & Co. was much less than to ordinary retailers."

The commission also dismissed a complaint against the Kraft-Phenix Corporation, cheese company, saying uniform discounts given quantity purchasers did not tend to create a monopoly.

Freeze Reassures Soviet Polar Camp

Soviet North Pole Camp (by wireless to Moscow), July 18 (AP).—The first signs of Arctic winter cheered the Soviet North Pole expedition today, easing the fear that the ice floe upon which it was encamped would break. Temperature dropped below freezing, to 30.2 degrees Fahrenheit, and snow fell.

The four men in the camp had been constantly busy moving supplies of food and fuel to stronger portions of the ice.

"Beautiful lakes have been found in the icefield," they radioed, "but the transfers from tents to safer spots prevent enjoyment of the beauty." The camp had drifted about 125 miles from the North Pole today. The sky was cloudy and the visibility from 2½ to 6 miles.

C. I. O. Joins A. F. of L. In Picketing Hospital

New York, July 18 (AP).—For the first time here since A. F. of L. President William Green and C. I. O. Chairman John L. Lewis announced last Thursday they would support each other's strikes, members of the rival labor factions joined today in common cause—picketing a hospital.

A police guard estimated 100 orderlies and nurses shouldered placards in the demonstration against the Jewish Hospital in Brooklyn. The A. F. of L.'s Hospital Employes Union called a strike there four months ago for union recognition and an eight-hour day. Today, the C. I. O.'s Association of Hospital and Medical Employes fell amicably in line for a two-hour tour of picket duty.

Regional Plan

By Bryant Putney

Two Bills Considered.

CONGRESS now has before it two bills which contemplate wide application of the principle of regional government. Introduced by Senator Norris and Representative Mansfield, these measures provide for the creation of seven Federal agencies to superintend the planning and development of natural resources in major river basins throughout the country.

The Norris and Mansfield bills are designed to carry out a plan for "regional husbandry" outlined by President Roosevelt in a special message to Congress. The President called for both immediate action and long-range planning on a regional basis to prevent floods, droughts and dust storms.

The bills offered by Senator Norris and Representative Mansfield provide for the regional division outlined by the President. One region would embrace the Atlantic seaboard, a second the Great Lakes and Ohio Valley, a third the drainage basins of the Tennessee and Cumberland rivers, a fourth the basins of the Missouri River and the Red River of the North, a fifth the basins of the Arkansas, Red and Rio Grande rivers, a sixth the basins of the Colorado River and the rivers flowing into the Pacific south of the California-Oregon line and a seventh the Columbia River basin.

• • • •

WHILE MUCH of their language is identical, the Norris and Mansfield bills differ in several important respects. The Mansfield bill, said by its sponsor to have been drafted by the Administration, provides for the creation of seven regional planning agencies, with power to make studies and surveys, to co-ordinate the work of Federal, State and local government agencies within their areas and to recommend development programs. These agencies, however, would have no power to undertake actual development programs.

In addition to establishing planning agencies, the Mansfield bill would authorize the President, "whenever in his judgment the national public interest or the interests of economy and efficiency will be served thereby," to create regional power authorities to develop and sell electric power.

Some students of the problem prefer the Mansfield bill to the measure proposed by Senator Norris because they believe that the latter overemphasizes the importance of power production in regional development and underemphasizes the importance of planning in advance of such development. Proponents of the Norris bill contend that combination of planning and development functions within a single agency would make possible more effective operations than would be possible if the two functions were given to separate agencies.

• • • •

REGIONALISM is looked upon by many students as the ultimate solution to the problem raised by the growing centralization of powers in the Federal Government. Most of these students believe that the abolition of State lines in favor of larger regional commonwealths is neither practical nor desirable; nor do they believe that regional agencies should be considered as political units having attributes of sovereignty. They contend that creation of new agencies for regional planning and development is warranted because many problems requiring governmental action overlap State boundaries yet do not call for national treatment. Jurisdictions of existing State governments, they say, are rarely coterminous with "problem areas"—such as the "dust bowl" in the Great Plains States or the cut-over timber areas in the Great Lakes States.

Pressure of problems extending beyond State boundaries has led to the creation by the States of several types of agencies for governmental action on a regional basis. These agencies range in type from informal conferences, such as the Lake States Conservation Conference, to permanent official bodies, such as the Port of New York Authority and the Colorado River Commission.

The Federal Government, no less than the States, has taken steps to deal with regional problems on a regional basis. Regional offices have been established in 74 Federal bureaus and commissions for the purpose of facilitating administration and in a few cases of decentralizing control. The Roosevelt Administration has fostered the creation of regional planning commissions in three sections of the country—New England, the Pacific Northwest and the Ohio Valley. A Government corporation—the TVA—has been created to plan and develop the resources of the Tennessee Valley.

Father And Son Dialogues.

"Popper, have there been any more long-distance airplane flights in the last few minutes?"

"I haven't heard of any, but Stalin will probably land in Chicago any moment now, my son."

"Is he coming by airplane, pop?"

"Nonsense! By glider!"

"Gee, I didn't know anybody could make flights across the ocean by glider."

"The way things are going the entire Moscow Board of Trade is apt to arrive in America any time by box kite."

• • • •

"Popper, why is everybody crossing by way of the North Pole?"

"I'm not certain, but I guess it's because all the other air routes are so congested. I hear travel on the New York-Bermuda and Gotham-Foynes route is so thick the planes have put on bumpers."

"Is it harder the North Pole way?"

"We always thought so until those Soviet flyers landed there and began sending out radio messages complaining of the heat."

"But didn't Peary and Dr. Cook and all those explorers say it was frightfully cold at the Pole, popper?"

"Yes. And probably it was. But those Communists make it hot wherever they go. Now run along and play with the boy next door."

"Popper?"

"Yes."

"Why is Russia suddenly doing so much flying to the United States? Teacher asked me that yesterday."

"Tell your teacher I don't know and that I'm as nervous about it as she is. I think your mother is calling you."

• • • •

"Popper, if everybody else can fly, why don't we get a plane?"

"We will, my son. I'm phoning for a demonstration in the morning. We'll all take our vacation in it."

"Where, popper?"

"Oh, I dunno. I want to visit Franz-Josef Land and Rudolph Island, but your mother favors a few days in Archangel and Nova Zembla. Now scat!"

Jonathan Swift

By William Lyon Phelps

Was He Married?

If I had to name the greatest prose writer in the English language, I should name Jonathan Swift, who, to use a common but ridiculous word, flourished in the eighteenth century. The most remarkable feature of his style was its absolute clearness; he not only always knew exactly what he wanted to say, he knew exactly how to say it.

• • • •

Yet, in accordance with the eternal mystery of the human heart, that makes teaching boys and girls in school so much more interesting than training dogs and horses, no one can definitely prove whether or not Swift married "the woman he loved," although we have plenty of his writings to her and their recorded conversations.

Another tremendous mystery in Swift's life is that although he was an orthodox clergyman, and we have his sermons and prayers, and although he was so sincere that Bolingbroke called him an "inverted hypocrite," no one can prove definitely whether or not he was a Christian.

Now the two most interesting subjects in the whole world are religion and sex; strange it is that the clearest writer of the English language should have left his contemporaries and future generations in doubt concerning his relations to God and woman.

$9,500,000,000 Farm Income Expected by U. S. Economists

Production for 1937 Largest Since 1929 and Twice That of 1932, Low Ebb of Depression; Prices Show Upward Trend.

By the Associated Press.

More dollars are rolling into the farmer's pockets this year than in any year since 1929.

Department of Agriculture economists delved into statistics yesterday and calculated that the 1937 cash income of farmers would be around nine and one-half billion dollars.

This will be almost one and one-half billion more than they got in 1936 and more than twice the cash they received in 1932, when their products brought them $4,377,000,000, the smallest sum in years.

During the first five months of this year, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics reported total cash income, including Government payment, at $3,202,000,000, an increase of 21 per cent over the same period last year.

Wheat Prices Up.

For the remainder of the year economists expect this rate of increase will be maintained, and in all probability boosted a little.

Farmers appear to be in a particularly advantageous position, with good demand for practically all their production and prices of some commodities showing upward tendencies.

Wheat prices during 1937-1938 are expected to be higher than 1936-1937 because of prospects of a lower than average world supply. On the basis of the last crop report the Nation's farmers will have more wheat to sell than in any year since 1931. Estimates of yield this year show 255,826,000 bushels more than last year. With cash wheat bringing more than $1, every one of the additional bushels helps to swell the surge of dollars into rural areas.

Corn Likely to Drop.

Many experts believe the indicated corn crop of 2,571,851,000 bushels, biggest since 1932, and almost a billion bushels more than 1936, undoubtedly will force corn prices down from present levels. The volume of cash corn sold, however, is relatively small and since most of the corn is feed to livestock, the money for it comes back to the farmer when he sells his steers, swine and other meat animals.

While it appears likely less livestock will be marketed during the remainder of this year than in the same period last year, higher prices are expected to offset any loss of cash income from this source.

Delay Facing Government's Reorganization

Robinson's Death Eliminates Bill's Only Active Champion.

By the Associated Press.

The death of Majority Leader Robinson has raised new doubts about the future of the Administration bill to reorganize the executive branch of Government. Some legislators said its chances for passing at this session have diminished.

Robinson, they said, was almost the only member of the Senate's reorganization committee who took an active part in pushing the bill. As chairman he directed a preliminary study of the measure and drafted a revised version which he introduced in the Senate shortly before his death.

Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, economy advocate who lays more stress on curtailing Government expenses through reorganization than do backers of the Administration proposal, expressed opposition to quick action on the bill.

He said he would demand full public hearings. Before Robinson's death, Byrd said, the majority leader agreed to hold hearings before submitting the measure to the Senate. Byrd estimated several months would be necessary to explore the subject adequately.

Under the Robinson bill the President would be given broad power to transfer, group, consolidate or abolish agencies of Government, subject to Congressional review. The measure calls for extension of the merit system and establishment of a career service.

The General Accounting Office would be brought under the Budget Bureau, with a general auditing office set up to make a post audit of public accounts.

The bill would also create a new cabinet post, the Department of Public Welfare, and would authorize appointment of six executive assistants to the President.

Some Senators predicted the split in Democratic ranks resulting from the court fight would carry over to consideration of Government reorganization. They said many of the same Senators who now oppose the revamping of the court would be lined up against the other Administration measure.

Ship Line Suspends Sailings in Strike

Fall River, Mass., July 18 (AP).—Suspension of the Fall River Line, which has been operating between this city and New York for 90 years, was announced today by General Agent John F. Clark, of the New England Steamship Co.

Ending a strike called last Tuesday in what the company said was a jurisdictional fight between two unions, 250 members of the steamer Commonwealth crew left the ship peaceably after Clark announced: "The line has suspended operations. There is no more strike."

U. S. Prepared To Enter More Gold Treaties

Will Listen to Proposals at Any Time; Accords Now Total Seven.

The Treasury, already linked in monetary agreements with seven nations, stands ready to listen to further proposals for leveling out the ups-and-downs of world currency values.

Disclosing this yesterday, officials added that while no new agreements are pending, foreign countries can open negotiations at any time.

In the last ten days the Treasury has added China and Brazil to its international partnership for breaking fluctuations in currency values.

Agreements with both these countries provide for the sale of gold from this Nation's $12,400,000,000 hoard.

After China and Brazil have acquired the metal, it will be left on deposit in this country. The Treasury then may advance dollars against it. These dollars would be used for currency stabilizing operations.

One major barrier to any widespread extension of the Chinese and and Brazilian agreements to other countries, officials said, is the $12,000,000,000 of unpaid war debts and the Johnson act.

The Johnson act forbids loans to war debt defaulters. Authorities said the dollar advances against gold under the Chinese and Brazilian agreements would, in reality, be loans.

They asserted Secretary Morgenthau believes such understandings with defaulting nations would violate the spirit of the Johnson law even if they were technically permissible.

Although the tri-power monetary agreement involves some war debt defaulters, officials explained that it does not provide for dollar advances to participating nations.

This accord originally was formulated September by great Britain, France and the United States. Later, Belgium, the Netherlands and Switzerland pledged co-operation.

Under the pact, participating nations use stabilization funds to purchase or sell currency in an effort to prevent sharp fluctuations in monetary relationships.

Congress Is Asked To Drop Sugar Bills

By the Associated Press.

Clarence R. Bitting, Florida sugar producer, called on Congress yesterday to drop all sugar legislation in view of the international sugar agreement expected to become effective on September 1.

In letters to members of the Senate and House, Bitting, one of the largest producers in the United States, said he believed it was "only fair" that the agreement should have opportunity to work out.

"Therefore," he added, "no sugar legislation should be enacted until the agreement has been effective for a sufficient time to indicate clearly its effects on American sugar conditions."

Topless Suits Ban For Men Is Upheld At Rehoboth Beach

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Lewes, Del., July 18.—There'll be no topless bathing suits on men bathers at Rehoboth Beach, it was decreed Saturday evening at an old-fashioned town meeting of resort property owners.

Culminating a two-weeks fight to defeat a town ordinance forbidding "Tarzans" to roam the beach in bathing trunks only, a four-to-two vote of the city council defeated the motion of Lammot duPont, jr., Wilmington member of the board of commissioners, that the ordinances be repealed. He stated at the close of the meeting that "the fight is not over by a long way."

DuPont and W. L. B. Boddy, jr., had started a "battle of petitions" with approximately 2,000 names against not more than 600 names on the list sponsored by D. Franklin Quillen, opposing the topless suit wearers.

Oliver O. Kuhn, D. C. Journalist, Dies at 51; Services Tomorrow

Managing Editor of Star Succumbs With Kin at Bedside.

wound through several cities, bringing him ultimately to Washington, where he joined the staff of the Star in 1912 as a copyreader. The outbreak of the World War gave him his first start toward an executive position.

Sent abroad as a correspondent, he quickly won distinction as a reporter with a "nose for news." He covered the Paris Peace Conference in 1919 and was at that time invited to assist the Italian government in the preparation of a history of its part in the war. In Paris in 1919 he became a close friend of President Wilson.

Upon his return to this country he rose through a series of promotions to the managing editorship of the Star. But it was on the radio he gained his greatest fame among the public.

Inaugurated Forum.

Mr. Kuhn began a feature called the National Radio Forum which brought to the microphone hundreds of prominent men, who discussed events of the day, sometimes in interview form, with Kuhn. As director of the feature, he introduced Cabinet members, Senators and leaders from important walks of life. His voice became known to millions.

Mr. Kuhn was the son of a crusading clergyman of the Christian Church, the late Rev. Thomas Harvey Kuhn, and Mrs. Emma Collins Kuhn. The father was famous for his energetic remarks from the pulpit and the political rostrum, and once was defeated in a primary race for a Congressional seat by James E. Watson, after a bitterly fought campaign.

Preferred Journalism.

So devout was the Kuhn family, according to a story Oliver used to tell, that the entire family on one occasion preached sermons on the same Sunday. Father, mother and son mounted pulpits in different churches. But the son preferred journalism to the Gospel.

After studying at Earlham College and Butler University, he obtained a job on the Palladium. From there he worked as a reporter on the Indianapolis News. Next came the Oklahoman, Oklahoma City, Okla.

He returned to Indianapolis as managing editor of the Sun. Before coming to the Star he worked on the Cleveland Press and The Washington Post and Washington Times. He remained with the Star after the day he joined it, March 12, 1912, with the exception of a leave of absence following the war to assist with the Italian history.

Mr. Kuhn has written many articles on Europe and was recognized as an authority on international affairs. For a while he wrote a column on world politics called "Shrapnel."

Founded Civic Unit.

He was deeply interested in the local affairs of his home community, Montgomery County, as well as world affairs. He was a founder of the Montgomery County Civic Federation and the Bethesda Volunteer Fire Department.

Proposed construction of a beltline railway through suburban Montgomery County was the issue through which the federation was brought together under Mr. Kuhn's direction in 1925. The project was blocked.

Mr. Kuhn was president of the federation from 1925 to 1927 and was its first member to receive the cup awarded annually for performance of "the most outstanding public service" in behalf of the county. The federation made him an honorary life member in October, 1933.

Formed Fire Department.

Mr. Kuhn called a meeting of Alta Vista civic leaders in 1926 and his proposal for establishment of the fire department was so well received that $2,100 was subscribed to its support with more than $37,000 raised later.

He served as president of the department at one time and was honorary member of the Bethesda Fire Board which has charge of the direction of affairs of the fire department.

He took a leading role in the organization in 1927 of the Alta Vista Community League which he served as presiding officer.

A few years ago he purchased a large farm on the Potomac River near the Chesapeake, where he had planned to spend the declining years of his life as a country gentleman. He enjoyed spending many week-ends there supervising the planting of crops of corn and tobacco.

Leaves Wife, Three Daughters.

His wife, whom he married in 1915, was Lenora Martin Rivero, daughter of the former Cuban Minister here. He also leaves three daughters, Lois Mary, Eleanor Margaret and Frances.

Mr. Kuhn was serving his third term as chairman of the executive committee of the Associated Press Managing Editors' Association. He presided at this group's annual meetings.

He was a member of Delta Tau Delta Fraternity, the Temple Noyes Lodge, F. A. A. M., and the Christian Church.

His colleagues on the Star yesterday spoke of his journalistic talents, describing him as "a born newspaperman." They also commented on his talent for quick judgment of news values, his ability to make correct decisions and his charming personality.

Former Washingtonian Helped Draft Federal Finance Measures.

Henry Parker Willis, international economist and a frequent financial adviser to the Federal Government, died yesterday at Oak Bluffs, Mass., after several months' illness with heart trouble, the Associated Press reported. He was 63.

Willis was a resident of Washington for many years, a faculty member at Georgetown University from 1905 to 1912. The following year he assisted in drafting the Federal Reserve act, and from 1914 to 1922 served the Federal Reserve Board, first as secretary and later as director of research.

He also had been a special adviser to the government of Rumania and the Irish Free State. He was a contributor to many financial periodicals.

Among the positions he held at various times were president of the Philippine National Bank, editorial writer for the New York Evening Post, Washington correspondent for the Journal of Commerce and the Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

Fairfax Starts Work on School For Woodlawn

Construction of the new elementary school at Woodlawn has been started following a delay of a year in clearing title to the site. The contract has been awarded C. C. Vellines, of Newport News, who submitted the low bid of $36,145.

The new building is to be completed in 150 days, which will allow occupancy at the opening of the second term. The school will contain four classrooms, an office, library and clinic. It will be of brick with slate roof and will follow closely the Colonial architecture of the section in which it is located. While no auditorium will be built at this time, provision has been made for a later addition of both classrooms and auditorium.

The board encountered title difficulties when it was found that a portion of the property that was given to the county for the new school in the Ingleside subdivision was covered with certain building restrictions that would not permit construction of the building. This made it necessary for the board to obtain waivers from a large number of purchasers in the subdivision who were scattered throughout the eastern section of the country.

French was playing bridge at his home shortly after finishing a game of golf with his lifelong friend, Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, when he collapsed of a heart attack.

He was for many years connected with the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, and in 1910 was appointed president of the Spokane, Portland & Seattle Railroad. He also served the Government during the World War as a "dollar-a-year" man.

Second Farewell Party Given by Wilbur Carrs

Many State Department Officials and Newspaper Friends Entertained by Newly Appointed Envoy to Czechoslovakia and Wife.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Carr entertained yesterday afternoon at their second large farewell party in two days. Mr. Carr does not sail until the end of August for his new post as Minister to Czechoslovakia, but since so many of their friends are leaving town for the summer, they decided to entertain them over the week-end. Yesterday's "at home" was preceded by a similar one on Saturday.

The newly appointed Minister and Mrs. Carr have only been in Czechoslovakia once, although they have traveled widely. They spent a week in Prague last summer, when Mr. Carr had no idea he would be appointed envoy there. He had been Assistant Secretary of State since 1924, so his appointment came somewhat as a surprise to his Washington friends.

Will Close Home.

Yesterday's guests represented a cross section of the State Department, plus a few newspaper people with whom Mr. Carr has been in contact during his years here. The affair was held in their spacious home on Wyoming avenue, which Mrs. Carr will close during her absence in Prague.

Their house is filled with choice pieces from all over the world, including tapestries and carvings, but yesterday's guests chose to spend most of the time in the garden. Here blue hydrangeas were blooming and chairs were set about on the flagged terraces. In the center was a fountain which splashed into a pool filled with water lilies.

Mrs. Carr, who wore a white chiffon frock splashed with a flower pattern, was assisted during the afternoon by Mrs. Tracy Lay and Mrs. Green Hackworth, wives of important State Department officials.

Notables Attend.

Among the guests were Dr. Stanley Hornbeck, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Alling, Mrs. Alling, in a frock of pink crepe; Mrs. Frederick Livesey, Mr. John Carter Vincent, Mrs. Ruth Shipley, head of the passport division of the State Department; Mr. John Farr Simmons, chief of the visa division; Mr. John Carter Vincent, who hopes to leave next week to join Mrs. Vincent in Newport where she is visiting.

Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Boggs, Mr. Shelden Thomas and Mr. Herbert Hengstler, former chief of the foreign service administration now transferred to Montreal. Mr. Denys Smith, correspondent of the London Post, was among the journalists at the party yesterday.

Everybody was greeting Allan Dawson and the bride he brought back with him last week from Rio de Janeiro, where he has been stationed. Mrs. Dawson wore yesterday a navy blue frock trimmed with touches of cerise and a matching hat. They are leaving in a few weeks for Hamburg, Germany, where Mr. Dawson has been assigned to duty.

Miss Rinaldi Becomes Bride

Wed to J. Stanley Russell, Jr., at Silver Spring Church.

Miss Virginia Loretta Rinaldi, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Rinaldi, of Sligo Park Hills, Md., Saturday became the bride of J. Stanley Russell, jr., of Washington, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Stanley Russell, of North Beach, Md.

The wedding took place at the rectory of St. Michael's Catholic Church, Silver Spring, Md., at 2:30 o'clock. Only close relatives attended.

A dinner party was given by the bride's parents at their home later in the evening for the immediate families.

The bride wore a street-length dress of dark blue lace with a high neckline and short puffed sleeves. She had white accessories and wore a corsage of pink roses. Her only bridal attendant was her sister, Mrs. Alphonse "Tuffy" Leemans, who before her marriage last month was Miss Theodora Rinaldi.

Mr. Leemans, gridiron star, was best man. Mr. and Mrs. Leemans shortened their wedding trip to the West to attend the wedding.

The bridal couple will reside in Washington after a motor trip of several days through the South. Mr. Russell is in the statistical division of the Federal Housing Administration.

De Espils Reach Narragansett For Summer

Luncheon Given at Dunes Club in Honor of Envoy and Wife.

Narragansett Pier, R. I., July 18.—Among newcomers at Narragansett this summer are the Argentine Ambassador, and Senora de Espil, of Washington, who are occupying Sea Dream cottage on the Boston Neck highway for the season. Mr. and Mrs. Francis White, of New York, gave a luncheon at the Dunes Club last Sunday in honor of Ambassador and Senora de Espil.

Other guests included Mr. and Mrs. Caryl Roberts, of Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. John F. Wilkins, of Washington and Narragansett; Mr. and Mrs. George Pierce Metcalf, Mr. and Mrs. Houghton P. Metcalf, of Rhode Island; Mr. and Mrs. C. Grant Lafarge, of New York and Saunderstown, R. I.; Mr. and Mrs. William Gammell, jr., Mr. and Mrs. William Steele Gray, jr., Mr. and Mrs. Henry Spencer, of Washington; Mr. and Mrs. Lee Warren and Mr. B. C. Law.

At another luncheon party at the Dunes Club, given by Dr. and Mrs. Hobart Endicott Warren, of Palm Beach, the guests were Mrs. Ernest Wilkinson, of Washington; Mrs. Winthrop McKim, of Tuxedo Park, and Miss Florence Emerson, of Boston.

Narragansett is on the eve of a revival of polo, and with excellent prospects within the next few weeks of some brilliant matches. The polo season at the Pier opened Thursday, with three polo fields open to members of the Narragansett Club for the first time since 1924. It will continue until August 6.

Philip S. P. Randolph, a pioneer in the field of polo at the Pier, who organized the first polo team here in 1896, is president of the Narragansett Club which has been reorganized from the old Point Judith Polo Club, familiar to old guests of the Pier at past tournaments, when Newport joined hands with Narragansett and four-in-hands from across the bay lined up on the polo fields of Wildfield Farm.

Golf is also a popular diversion at Narragansett, and one of the events in the season is the annual women's invitation golf tournament which opens at the Point Judith Country Club tomorrow, with Miss Beatrice de Coppet, of New York, chairman of the tournament committee. She will be assisted by Mrs. Hinman Bird, of New York; and Mrs. L. Wister Randolph and Mrs. J. Donald Pryor, of the summer colony. The members of the Narragansett Club participated in the invitation tournament at Watch Hill last week.

An event of interest to the members of the cottage colony was the annual meeting on Wednesday afternoon of the South County Garden Club at Deepwell, the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Davis Miller, at Wakefield, R. I. Mrs. Miller presided and Mrs. Ernest Wilkinson, of Washington; Miss Elizabeth Robinson, of Wakefield, and Mrs. A. E. Thomas, of New York, were appointed members of the nominating committee.

The South County Garden Club will sponsor, together with the Narragansett Horticultural Society, the sixteenth annual flower show at the Narragansett Community House on August 10 and 11. Maj. Gen. John L. Chamberlain and Mrs. Chamberlain, of Washington, entertained at luncheon on Sunday at their summer home in honor of the Misses Henrietta and Kate Wickes, of Baltimore. Mrs. Isaac E. # District Dominates Convention Of Professional Women's Clubs

Committee Meetings Keep Delegations Busy at Atlantic City; General Sessions Open Today With Sharp Clashes Expected.

By Jessie Ash Arndt,

Atlantic City, N. J., July 18.—Sunday was not a day of rest for the business and professional women here from every State in the Union for the biennial convention of the national federation. Miss Charl Ormond Williams, of Washington, national president, has been here since the middle of last week and has been presiding continuously at committeemeetings preliminary to the general convention sessions opening today.

Haddon Hall is convention headquarters. Early yesterday morning the lobby was dotted with groups of federation members exchanging greetings. If the trip to Atlantic City is a vacation for the business women, they are not spending it in rest and recreation—there's evidently business to be done by the organization and they're losing no time in getting at it.

Fair weather, the board walk and beach may be attracting other visitors but, at least, until the convention is well under way, few of the federation members show signs of deserting business for pleasure.

Sharp Discussion Possible on Charter.

Commmittee reports were being made yesterday in executive sessions preliminary to the formal opening of the convention this morning at 9 o'clock. The woman's charter, which was proposed to the federation and other women's organizations will be one of the subjects discussed and may lead to a sharp division of opinion. It embodies objectives for legislation affecting women in all countries. Mary Stewart, of Sacramento, Calif., formerly of Washington, will preside at the symposium to be conducted on it. Anita Pollitzer, vice chairman of the National Woman's Party, and Burnita Sheldon Matthews, member of the national council of the National Woman's Party, both of Washington; Mary Van Kleek, director of industrial studies for the Russell Sage Foundation in New York, and Dorothy Kenyon, first deputy commissioner of licenses, New York, will be the speakers.

Miss Stewart is chairman of the special committee which has been appointed to decide on the educational processes to be conducted within the federation membership on the subject of the charter and has serving with her Mrs. Dorothy Dunn, of Washington, legislative chairman of the National Federation; Mrs. Rosa E. Cunningham, of Des Moines, Iowa; Mrs. Percival Stephenson, of Fairmont, Minn., and Miss Kathryn Starbuck, of Saratoga Springs.

The federation is looking ahead in its program, with plans under way for the celebration in 1939 of 100 years of women's progress in business and professions. Miss Williams announced yesterday a steering committee including Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, of New Rochelle, N. Y., with whom the idea originated; the Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, Mrs. Emmet Finley, of New York; Dr. Mary E. Wooley, of Mount Holyoke; Mrs. Ruth Comfort Mitchell, of Los Gates, Calif.; Mrs. Margaret Cuthbert, of New York, and Miss Helen J. Sioussat, of New York, to plan the observance.

Washington definitely dominates the convention here with Miss Williams presiding; Miss Earlene White, of the local club, national vice president, taking a prominent part in the sessions and also being discussed as a likely successor to Miss Williams; Mrs. Dunn reporting as legislative chairman, and the convention program including Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, who adwressed the all-States banquet of the Washington Club Friday night; Representative Mary T. Norton and Miss Stewart.

Most of the Group Already on Ground.

Miss Nina Kinsella, president of the local organization and most of the 30 members who will attend the sessions, already are here. Others will come later in the week.

One of the interesting delegates is Dr. Adele Hampton, of Miami, Fla., business manager of the Dade County Medical Society, and one of the leading professional women of her State. She will be 60 years old on her next birthday, and is one of the oldest active members of the federation in point of years. Accompanied by one of her twin daughters, Mrs. Dorothy Bonamy, she stopped in Baltimore to visit the other twin, Mrs. George F. Klein, and her family of five children on the way to Atlantic City.

She did the driving herself on the 1,460 mile trip from Miami, and expects to go to New York before her return. At the last biennial convention, in Seattle, she drove 1098 miles, visiting every national park in the country en route there and back.

Federation delegates last night were entertained at a reception given by the New Jersey Federation in the Vernon room of Haddon Hall. Gov. Harold G. Hoffman extended the State's welcome to the business women; Mayor Charles D. White, that of the city, and Miss Jessie Winkworth, former State president, htat of the New Jersey federation, that of the New Jersey federation, were in the receiving line.

The Office Psychiatrists.

"Mr. Lyons simply took my head off about those mistakes in that letter. He's getting grouchier all the time."

"That's just his Mussolini complex. He used to worry me a lot until I started looking at him psychologically."

"Well I certainly wish I had the nerve to talk to him the way Miss Perch does. Did you ever see anything like the way she tells everybody to get off?"

"That's because she can't get a man—it's a complex. That's what Ted Flick says. He knows all about that stuff—he's read Freud and everybody."

"Well I suppose they wouldn't dare fire her since she does so much work—stays nights and everything. Honestly she makes me ashamed —"

"She just does that on account of her complex. She's frustrated, Ted says."

"What puzzles me though is the way Geraldine Pone gets by. She just loafs around all day. She simply doesn't do anything."

"That's because she can't get a man. She's frustrated too. Ted thinks she's got a split libido. You know it's perfectly wonderful about psychology—the way it explains things."

"It certainly is. Say do you know what I been wondering? I been wondering if there was anything behind that little mustache Mr. McNish is growing."

"Ted thinks there's plenty behind it. Say, did you ever notice the way he yells for office boys? You know what I believe? I believe he's suppressed at home!"

"Say I bet that's just what's the matter with Mr. Flint. I bet that's the reason he's so fussy about his typewriter. I bet that's why he won't lend his fountain pen——"

"No, this is the way I figure Mr. Flint—I figure he sucked his thumb when he was a child. Just take a good luck at his thumb sometime when he's not looking."

"Say, Bert Clipper's got a funny thumb! I wonder if that's why he's so fresh with the girls. And married and everything—with four children!

"I thought it was five."

"Well maybe it is—anyway I know it's at least four. And then carrying on the way he does with Margie Biff. Of course though, anybody that'd wear a sunback dress and bare legs to an office——"

"Oh well of course everybody knows Margie is a Narcissine. You know you really got to make allowances."

"I suppose so. Of course, maybe she sucked her thumb too. You know you never can tell about people."

"I'll say you can't. That's why I got no patience with people like Miss McTabbie saying such mean things about everybody."

"I can't see what makes her so catty."

"Well it's one of two things—Ted says. Either she can't get a man or she's got an inferiority complex."

"Maybe so. Then look at Mrs. Flitter. She's got a husband and she's getting crankier every day."

"Oh well all she needs is some man to give her a good beating—Ted says. He can analyze people perfectly marvelously, and he says she must have dreamed when she was a child of marrying Tarzan and then—well she got Mr. Fitter."

"Psychology certainly is interesting. It tells you so much about people. Say where are you going?"

"Oh Paul Bloke said he'd buy my lunch for me."

"Paul Bloke! I thought you said just the other day you wouldn't go with him to a dog fight."

"I did only this is how it is—you know he's a schizoid. At least that's what Ted says. And it's always dangerous to cross people like that. So I thought I'd better not argue. Anyway I figure around an office it's always better to look at people psychologically."

"Psychology certainly is marvelous."

PLEASANT HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

"I'M LIKE a bad penny turning up again," writes one of our readers "You may not remember, but it was before housecleaning time when I wrote you last telling of my troubles with this old flat of mine. It's had 16 years of rough usage, I can tell you!"

"I now want to make a few more changes—not expensive ones, mind you," her letter continues. "The living room is something like the morning after the night before, as my husband and I both like to read and our 9-year-old daughter has her little desk there, too. So you can imagine! I want a new rug. The davenport is in bad condition, and one club chair takes up space, but nobody ever sits in it. The only good piece of furniture is a fireside chair I bought for my husband a year ago. Now, if I could only find a bookcase (a long one with shelves at the sides) to hold the books and magazines now on the old library table, which I'd like to get rid of. I plan to get a new sofa and a chair for myself, just to fit me. What would you advise for curtains?

We're glad to offer our 2 cents worth! Are you sure you don't need the library table? It sounds like a very useful piece of furniture, and if you could push it against the wall and hang a good picture over it and add a nice lamp, you might find it very pleasing. Maybe you need the bookcase anyway . . . if so, you could either have some nicely tailored built-in shelves, or else get a secretary desk with book shelves above and a desk below. We think straight-hung yellow ninon curtains would be best at the windows—put rings on them if you want to slide them back and forth. Why not get your new rug in a grayed light plum color, have the walls done in pale yellow, then have your new sofa slip covered in turquoise rep. Your chair would be pretty in a slip cover of aquamarine and your husband's in gray with plum welting.

New Fur Coats Shorter in Length With Flattering Broad Shoulders

The raccoon coat (left), shows the new trend for boxy jackets; collar and sleeve treatment are interesting. This practical and smart coat is equally suitable for business woman and college girl. Hudson seal, in a striking model (below), flaunting the new broad shoulders and upstanding collar, could be worn for both daytime and evening. The straight line silhouette (right), in popular seven-eighths length, has new small collar, loose cuffs and shoulder detail. This model is dyed ermine in a rich brown tone.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

'Is It Possible to Cure Man of Flirting When He Seems to Be Made That Way?' Asks Outraged Wife.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Is it possible to cure a man of flirting when he seems to be made that way? My husband and I have a 9-year-old daughter and we could have a happy home but for this blight. He glances smilingly several times at waitresses, salesgirls, 15-year olds, 60-year-old women—any and all of them. His glances are not exactly flirtations but just challenging enough to make the lady in the case realize he is very conscious of her. It is impossible for me to respect a woman-conscious man. I think it's rather unclean.

* * * *

When he acts so, I am filled with disgust and humiliation. In any group, he always chooses one girl to shower his attentions on, so that he's very conspicuous and it causes others to look at me to see if I mind. It leaves me without an escort, which is always humiliating, and tells the world that he is more interested in others than in me. . . . Separation and divorce are out of the question for I don't believe in such action where a child must be considered.

* * * *

Yet my nerves and health are being wrecked from the "freezing up" which is my only protection against feeling the unhappiness so much that I wonder if I can keep my reason. We have discussed the subject very frankly. My husband realizes his "woman-consciousness" is wrecking our marriage and he has wept, promised and implored another chance. He tells me I am his whole world—when we are alone! I am convinced he has never been unfaithful, except spiritually; but he can be ensnared, temporarily, by any woman.

* * * *

All women profess to like him. Girls tell me they think he's "cute;" married women tell me they think he must be charming to live with. How I hate that! He has no reserve and I am very reserved. My family has told me to ignore his actions, but if I do, he just gets worse, and I refuse to be the neglected wife of a married flirt . . . There is no contact left between us, and I must find peace of mind. Please answer as soon as possible.

SELF-RESPECTING.

Some Curative Methods.

DEAR SELF-RESPECTING: As you perhaps know, "mental cruelty" has long been recognized in many courts of law as legitimate ground for divorce or legal separation. Your husband knows he is being mentally cruel in the extreme in indulging in cheap, promiscuous flirtations with every woman who catches his eye. Where you have made a big mistake, I believe, is in letting him know that, so far as you are concerned, "separation and divorce are out of the question." Mind you, I am no cheerful advocate of easy divorce or hasty separation. I think either is a last desperate measure, to be considered only as a means of correcting an otherwise irremediable situation or condition. And I think there are some delinquent marriage partners who are inspired to reform only when they are confronted with the imminent actuality of such a step being taken.

* * * *

Therefore, as one method of bringing your husband under control, I think it might be advisable to inform him that his conduct has caused you, finally, to reverse your lifelong theory that divorce or separation is out of the question—regardless of the provocation. You might tell him that you now believe, for your very health's sake, which you must conserve because of your child, that it may be necessary for you to make definite arrangements to live apart from him permanently, unless he mends his manners.

* * * *

There are, moreover, two other methods which might alleviate the situation somewhat. One is to begin right now to develop other interests in life—genuine interests: in civic work, cultural study, social activities or an ever-widening circle of congenial friendships, contracted on an individual basis which leaves your husband more or less out of the picture. You must create opportunities for frequent immersion in manifold absorbing activities which temporarily, at least, will wash your mind clean of all brooding concern with your husband's hurtful actions. Such expedients, employed as emergency means for the present, will naturally develop into ways of life in themselves finally; and eventually you will find yourself with a brand-new emotional perspective; you will learn to stand on your own psychic and social foundations, so to speak; you will see your husband's conduct as being beneath notice and concern; and you will develop a lofty, genuine indifference to his lack of consideration which in itself will be the best check-rein on his flirtatiousness.

* * * *

Another method, which has been successfully employed by some wives who have found themselves in a predicament similar to yours—but which is rather less commendable because it employs a stooping rather than an elevating technique—is to "meet fire with fire," so to speak. In other words, to devote yourself (on the theory that the end justifies the means) to being just as conspicuous, in your attention to men, as your husband makes himself in his attention to women.

* * * *

More than a year ago, a letter published in this column inspired a discussion of how best to deal with husbands who "jolly" waitresses. One wife told how she cured her husband of this humiliating habit. She said she induced him to take her, on several occasions, out to dine at certain places where men were employed as waiters. Immediately on being seated she precipitated an animated, conspicuous and absurd (she admitted it was all of this) interchange not only with the waiter who served them but with all other waiters whose attention she could attract, and continued this exhibition throughout the entire program of ordering, dining, settling the check and making her exit. At first her husband was astonished; then indignant and finally sheepishly conquered. She had made him see his conduct through different eyes, and both agreed to swear off together. That pact, she said, ended for all time her erstwhile humiliation over what had been his habitual "jollying" of waitresses.

* * * *

Such an offensive, of course, should be employed only by a woman who could play the role with such complete, ironic detachment that it would have no deteriorating effect on her intrinsic nature. And it should be conducted—if at all—only out of her children's sight.

All Fur Fashions of 1937-38 Are Chic, Young, Comfortable

By Ethel Ehlen.

THE MIDSUMMER sale of fur coats in the Washington stores and shops brings the new styles for fall and winter into the limelight. Here are some highlights in the styling and the popular trends in furs to look for when shopping:

Shoulders are broad, the majority of sleeves are loosely fitted with flowing lines at the wrists.

All coats are shorter, back fullness is modified, collars are small.

Furs range from mink, through Persian lamb, Hudson seal, caracul, kidskin and raccoon, to the inexpensive lapins and pony.

Black is the leading color, with brown and gray ranking next in importance.

Generally speaking, there is no contrasting fur for trimming—collars and cuffs (if cuffs are added) are of the same fur as the coat.

Fur Jackets Popular.

Fur jackets are a new trend for the oncoming seasons, ranging in length from fingertip to the much exploited trotteur, which is longer than fingertip length. These are fashioned from expensive furs such as mink, sable and the like; also from Persian lamb, caracul, squirrel, fitch, Persian paw, kidskin, lapin, and long-haired furs, such as opossum and raccoon. In other words, practically every type of fur is being made into the ultra-smart jackets, and they are equally appropriate for the business woman and college girl. In the majority of instances, these clever jackets may be worn for both daytime and evening, unless the fur and the styling is definitely of the sports type.

Full-length fur coats are a thing of the past as far as fashion is concerned. To be in style this winter, at least 2 inches of your dress must show beneath your coat, the popular dress length being 14 inches from the floor. The seven-eighths-length coat is being generally accepted for women of all ages, for all kinds of fur and for all methods of styling. Everything is being done by designers to make fur coats as smart, comfortable and as light in weight as possible. A new shearing process, which makes beaver much lighter in weight, has brought this fur back into the style picture. Heavier furs, particularly those of the long-haired varieties, are fashioned into short jackets, to accomplish a minimum of weight.

Slight Back Fullness.

A high style feature in some of the coats, both jackets and seven-eighths lengths, is the tuxedo front; softly folded revere-like pieces of the fur extending the entire length of the coat. Pockets are either of the conventional placing, or adopt the new trend which is being exploited in dresses; that is, up near the collar. For both warmth and chic, some of the miniature collars are of the upstanding styling; sometimes severely plain and again flaring. The full swagger coat has been replaced by a slight swagger, with just a suggestion of fullness. Oftentimes this is accomplished by fine tucks or gathers extending from a deep back yoke.

The new fur coats are smart, youthful and comfortable. There is such a wide variety of furs and styling from which to make a choice this year that it will not be difficult to be individual in your selection. With the furs manipulated like fabrics, and dressmaker details lending variety to the current modes, the latest fur coats are flattering to the figure, rather than adding an illusion of bulk, as formerly. Summing up the fur fashion scene for 1937-38, it is definitely one of the outstanding features of the entire style picture—unprecedented for smartness, comfort and variety.

Improve Your Conversation

GOOD CONVERSATION! That's what makes friends for you—encourages them to drop in, ask you out, call up.

Sparkling conversation doesn't take a brilliant mind. Just observe a few do's and dont's.

The Dont's.

1. Don't deflate the other fellow by saying, "Yes, I know," or "I've heard that one before."

2 If you're asked whether you liked a certain movie or book, don't cut off the talk by answering simply "yes" or "no." Give the conversation a lift by saying, "Yes, and did you love that wild mountain scenery as much as I did?" Or, "No, I thought the story much too sordid. Do you think people really live like that?"

3. Don't ask coyly over the phone "Guess who this is!" You're only irritating, not mysterious.

The Do's.

1. Refer to the other fellow's tastes. "I had an idea you'd feel that way about it" or "Did you see that article about your favorite movie star, Bill?" Notice the friendly touch of the name.

2. Use a confident tone—"I know that my experience on the bus will amuse you," not a weak and timid "I didn't tell you, did I, about my experience on the bus?"

Send 15 cents for our booklet, "Improving Your Conversation," to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West 19th street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address, and the name of booklet.

TODAY'S HEALTH TALK

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

Skin Malignancies.

I heard an eminent specialist say the other day that 82 per cent of cancers of the larynx and vocal cords could be cured, but as a matter of fact, 10 per cent of them are cured. This means only one thing—that they are not obtained early enough.

In the case of the larynx it will not do to wait until the patient is suffering pain on swallowing, extreme loss of weight and emaciation, as well as loss of voice. The diagnosis must be suspected in any middle-aged person who develops intractable hoarseness. The reason that patients wait so long on these conditions is that they cannot see the larynx.

There is no excuse, however, for this on the skin, and as a matter of fact, it is in the skin that our best results on the prevention and treatment of cancer have occurred. Not only can we see the lesion developing, we can see it in its earliest stages, and it is exposed to proper intensive treatment.

The best time to treat skin cancers is before they become cancerous. The term "pre-cancerous" is attached to a group of skin manifestations which if followed to the end of their development may result in malignant degeneration of the skin. These occur especially in middle-aged or elderly people, and especially those with a dry skin which has a tendency to wrinkling, although nobody is exempt.

The most frequent of these precancerous skin changes is a so-called keratosis. Keratin is the substance which produces the horny layer of the skin, and when these dry, scaly, rough, hard, elevated patches, with ill defined borders, occur, they should be treated either by radium or by some form of electric desiccation. Any of these scaly spots which begin to act inflamed and bleed easily should certainly be immediately treated.

Another form of surface change that should be regarded with suspicion is leukoplakia. This consists in irregularly shaped white or milky patches or streaks, frequently seen on the tongue. There may develop a considerable thickening and fissures. Irritation of long standing is the usual cause assigned to such changes. The use of tobacco and alcohol, digestive disturbances, decay of the teeth and pyorrhea have all been indicated as contributory causes.

The blue or black slate mole, which as a rule is non-hairy, is one that also is better off than on.

In treatment of these early skin lesions, as well as in actual malignant degeneration itself, there are only four methods of treatment which are of any value—radium, X-ray, surgery and electro-coagulation. Most specialists agree today that radium with X-ray is the best from every standpoint, but the proper form of treatment will depend upon the physician's judgment.

Salves and advertised remedies are the most certain way of making them worse.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, July 18.

DURING the hottest weather of the season, the helpmate, poor wight, has been lying in his bed of pain in our wonderful New York Hospital, trying to shake off the constant headache which results from concussion of the brain. He strongly advises all of you to avoid getting your brain banged about, as nothing can be done for such a calamity save rest, with what patience can be mustered. He has found this is precious little when the mercury is nudging 100.

ALICE HUGHES.

After observing his case for a period of three weeks, I have an idea that his lot has been greatly eased by as pretty and helpful a group of angels of mercy as ever rubbed the back of a sufferer. He tells me that these poor girls have no easy time of it in broiling weather, with their heavily starched uniforms and sleeves buttoned tightly at the wrist. He derives comfort from the feeling that after the supervisor has made her rounds, they roll up the sleeves and get a bit of arm comfort.

The head nurse on the lofty fifteenth floor is a cute, plumpish little girl named Jeanette Stone, who may be the only versifying Florence Nightingale of her rank in the Nation's hospitals. Practically all her notes to associates are in rhymed meter, which does much to brighten a long hospital day. Few of us give a thought to the hot weather trials of the nursing profession. Probably it is high time we did.

* * * *

One of the patients on the spouse's floor was the 14-year-old son of George Washington Hill, the cigaret baron, who was laid up while recovering from a spell of broncho-pneumonia. Master Hill didn't like the heat in the hospital much, either, and was toted off to the country at the earliest possible moment.

I remember once mentioning a little rich old lady who, though not sick, for several years has made her home at the New York Hospital. She prefers hospital life to the ardors of running a home. I now learn that money may not be everything, but it's quite a lot. This summer, at her own expense, she has had her room air-conditioned.

* * * *

And to keep you further au courant with hospital doings, the lovely Julia Lydig Hoyt, who has spent the past three months here having five ribs removed after a bad case of pleuro-pneumonia contracted in Italy, is now on the mend enough to undergo her next and last operation—a plastic miracle to fill out the dent in her back where the whittling took place. As to the ribs themselves, the medico tells me that they grow back, on adults as well as children. Seems unbelievable to us—but that's what he says. Meanwhile, Julia goes shopping, goes to the movies, has tea with friends—and comes back to the friendly New York Hospital for shelter and care.

* * * *

The beauty of these Texas girls is getting legendary in our town. Not only are many of them, such as Janice Jarrett, to be found in the ranks of top-flight models, but the other day another tasty Texan named Margaret Tallichet, from Dallas, stepped into one of the biggest and swellest Long Island parties of the summer, and stole all the play from our local society pippins. The occasion was the wedding anniversary of Charles Payson and Joan Whitney Payson, the happy wife being the sister of "Jock" Whitney for whose movie company the Lone Star sweetie is to work.

Last Suspect Held In $17,000 Robbery

By the Associated Press.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation announced yesterday the arrest of Harry Blee, 31, described as the last member at large of the O'Malley gang of bank robbers.

The fugitive was seized in Los Angeles yesterday by special agents to await removal to Kansas City, Mo., where he was indicted in 1935 for participation in the $17,000 robbery of the First National Bank of Neosha, Mo.

Blee was captured without resistance, the bureau said, although a revolver was found in his rooms. Others previously apprehended included Walter O'Malley, Jack Richards, Epp Melton, Virgil Melton, Fred Reese, Leonard Short and Clarence Sparger.

Road Contract Signed.

Reserve Bluecoat Finds His Own Tavern Rifled

Brockton, Mass., July 18 (AP).—John Barry today served both himself and his community. As a tavern owner, Barry complied with the law by locking his doors at midnight. He then went home, put on his police uniform and reported to headquarters as a reserve officer.

Barry was assigned to "try the doors" on Main street. The first door Barry tried was the door of his tavern. He found it open and discovered somebody had taken $100 in cash and a box of cigars.

Body of Plane Victim Starts Caracas-D. C. Trip

Caracas, Venezuela, July 18 (AP).—The body of U. S. Commercial Attache Frederic D. Grab was brought to Caracas today from the jungle, where he died April 2, from injuries received in an airplane crash.

The body will be shipped to New York tomorrow aboard the S. S. Carabobo. Funeral services and burial will be held at Arlington Memorial Cemetery at Washington.

Contract Bridge

The hand shown below is an interesting example of the differences in results between the asking bid method of bidding slams and the direct method. Played in a 12-table tournament, the hand was bid to six spades by every pair which did not use the asking bids. The asking-bidders, however, got to seven spades.

South, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

Those who used the direct method bid the hand as follows

| South | West | North | East |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ♠ | Pass | 2 ♣ | Pass |
| 3 ♡ | Pass | 4 ♠ | Pass |
| 6 ♠ | Pass | Pass | Pass |

South had no way of finding out about the two red singletons, and North could not be sure that South had a singleton club and absolutely solid spades.

Those who used the asking bids got to the grand slam as follows:

| South | West | North | East |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ♠ | Pass | 2 ♣ | Pass |
| 3 ♡ | Pass | 4 ♠ | Pass |
| 5 ◇ | Pass | 6 ♣ | Pass |
| 6 ♡ | Pass | 6 N T | Pass |
| 7 ♠ | Pass | Pass | Pass |

South's bid of five diamonds was an asking bid, and North's response showed second-round control of diamonds and the Ace of clubs. Since South was willing to go to six in any event, he was perfectly willing to ask in hearts also to make a try for seven. North's response of six no-trump showed second-round control of that suit also. South needed no more for the grand slam.

The play was not difficult. West opened a trump and all South had to do was to establish dummy's clubs. He won the first trick in his own hand, took the Ace of clubs and ruffed a club. The Jack of spades was the entry for another club ruff. The adverse trump was then drawn, and dummy was then established, with a trump remaining for entry to the clubs.

Bob Burns Says:

There's nothin' in the world that spurs a man's ambition like the responsibility of children. It's just like my Uncle Hod—he was always a 'ne-er do-well" and never worked a day in his life until his son was born. When he came into town and started lookin' for a job people just couldn't believe it.

One of the citizens said, "Well, why is it that you've never taken a job when we've offered it to you, but now you're actually askin' for work?"

Uncle Hod says, "Well, I've got a son now and I've got to get ahold of some money." He said, "When my boy is 21 years old, I want'ta get him a haircut—I want him to have things in life that I have missed."

THE FEDERAL DIARY

Reg. U. S. Patent Office.

By Scott Hart.

The Veterans' Administration, under an agreement with the Civil Service Commission, offers an opportunity to hospitalized and domiciled veterans: They may train for employment as telephone and elevator operators, with an object of qualifying for positions under the Commission. Gen. Frank T. Hines advises disabled service men to qualify for these positions if they so desire.

To be eligible for training, the veterans must be found physically fit for such duties and must be accepted by the utility officers as having the necessary ability. The Civil Service regulations require that applicants for positions as elevator operators have at least three months' experience either on electric or hydraulic equipment. Telephone operators are required to have at least six months' experience in a large central office or one year as an operater in a branch exchange where there are at least 100 lines in full-time operation.

The Interstate Commerce Commission reports the shattering of a mailing room record: Inserting over a million inclosures in 85,000 envelopes—13 in each envelope, to be exact—sealing them and placing them in 248 mail sacks ready for mailing, was the recent feat performed by the Bureau of Motor Carriers on a Saturday, a four-hour day. It is thought to have been a record mailing from the Commission in so short a time. Certainly, it demonstrates the nimbleness of fingers, good planning and co-ordination.

League Asks Civil Service Bill Changes

Group Demands Hearing to Make Suggestions on Reorganization Act.

Provision for Senate Approval of Nominees Is Under Fire.

Contending the Federal Reorganization bill does not provide a real extension of the competitive system in the service, the National Civil Service Reform League has asked the Senate Select Committee on Government Organization for an opporunity "to make constructive suggestions" for amending the bill when hearings are held.

Meantime, Miss Marguerite M. Wells, president of the National League of Women Voters, charged that Congress, ignoring election pledges, is making raids on the merit system, while State Legislatures this year have made notable gains in the establishement and improvement of State personnel programs.

The request of the Reform League for a hearing was made, it was said, with a view to making the bill "carry out the President's recommendations for extension of the merit system "upward, downward and outward."

Fears Political Influence.

Eliot Kaplan, executive secretary off the league, said that the bill contains several provisions obstructive to a real career service other than the commonly heard objection to its requirement that appointments of heads of divisions and bureaus (many of whom are now in the competitive classified service) be confirmed by the Senate and thereby subjected to political influence.

One, he pointed out, would exclude from the civil service act all positions in "temporary" emergency agencies, and without specifying who is to determine what constitutes a "temporary" agency. A second objection, as the league sees it, would exclude all positions which present law requires to be made by the President with advice and consent of the Senate, whether or not such positions are policy determining.

This, Kaplan says, would continue outside of the competitive service not only Presidential postmasters, collectors of internal revenue and other positions long considered frankly political but also positions recently made subject to Senate confirmation against the President's protest. Among these he named "experts" and attorneys in the Social Security Board

Extension Blocked.

"While the bill purports to authorize the President to transfer positions to the classified service, any substantial extension of the competitive service would be made practically impossible by a section which leaves outside the scope of this authority all positions now exempt from the civil service act," the league said.

Miss Wells, president of the National League of Women Voters, cited instances to prove her charge that Congress lately has been raiding the merit system. She pointed to various provisions in the recently signed independent offices appropriation act and in the pending Robinson reorganization bill.

"It is amazing," she said, "to find that even in the reorganization bill, slated to embody merit system recommendations of the highest character, the 'Presidential appointment' method of evasion would be further extended.

"Spoils Grab-Bag."

"Patronage appointments for all civilian CCC employes, railroad employe preferences in the railroad retirement legislation, and the Senate blockade on the Ramspeck postmasters' bill, are a few of the disturbing illustrations of Congressional indorsement of the spoils grab-bag."

Contrasting the activity in various States to improve the merit system, Miss Wells said:

"Four States—Arkansas, Connecticut, Maine and Tennessee—have adopted new merit system laws. This is the largest number of States to act in any one year. In nine States having merit system programs, extension legislation was enacted. In only one instance was a serious backward step taken.

Blow With Bottle Kills Man, 9 Held

Nine men and women remained in police custody last night in connection with the death of James E. Brown, colored, 31, 2218 Twelfth place northwest, early yesterday morning.

Brown was struck on the head with a bottle by an unidentified assailant in an altercation at Sixth and Trumball streets northwest. He died in Freedmen's Hospital.

Investigation by Detective Sergt. Clyde N. Strange led to the wholesale arrests. Strange said he arrested the number for questioning when he was unable to obtain a coherent story from anyone who witnessed the fight.

Post Staff Photos.

By Jay Walz.

From their homes on the Potomac River cliffs just above Chain Bridge and the District line, more than 200 residents of Brookmont, Md., view the vestige of the once busy C. & O. Canal and long for a godparent who will restore its old-time beauties.

They want water poured back in the channel. They want unsightly underbrush cut away and the towpath rebuilt to its former state of usefulness. They want all this for beauty's sake—and out of it might come annihiliation for mosquitoes that breed in the present stagnant waters.

The Brookmont Civic League is taking the lead in this canal rehabilitation movement, and last week passed a resolution urging it be launched.

Yesterday a member of the board of directors said the community's wishes on the subject had been made clear, although no one seemed to know just where, or to whom, to send the appeal.

Who cares about the old canal? Indeed, who has authority and the facilities to bring back the glories of the old waterway that once led river boats from the tidewater up the Potomac Valley to Cumberland? That is what the citizens of Brookmont want to know.

Just above Chain Bridge the old canal makes a clean break between modern times and the past. Up to that point you can look upon its quiet waters and dream romantically of the barges that used to plow up and down its course.

The channel there is full to the brim—the boats, except for occasional canoes, are gone, but water continues to flow down the bid to feed powerful mills in Georgetown.

But a few blocks above Chain Bridge there is a parting of the ways. Facing upstream you look upon a "feeder" channel on the left, and on the right you see an abandoned lock and then a high concrete wall that is a grim reminder that the old times are gone. Above this the canal bed is drained dry, except for the stagnant pools.

Following the rocks by a rapidly disappearing tow-path you would come upon one broken-down lock after another—nearly 70, in fact, until you reach Cumberland. But activity—not a bit of it.

Today the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Co. is interested chiefly in the 5-mile stretch that links the Georgetown plants and the outlet lock above Chain Bridge. The sole function of the canal is to furnish these industrial establishments—a paper mill, a flour mill and two ice plants—with water power.

The company has stationed Walter King, a veteran lock-keeper, at the "feeder" point. It is his job to see that the water in the canal is kept high enough to give the Georgetown plants all the power they want.

King and his wife have lived at the outlet point for the last eight years. Every morning at 5:30 o'clock they go out to the canal, open the gates for the waters sidetracked from the Potomac to flow in. Then all day long they stay by the telephone for calls coming in from the plants asking for more water.

Before moving to his present home just below Brookmont, King and his family lived with his mother, Mrs. B. F. King, who was keeper at the next lock upstream for nearly 50 years. When traffic was discontinued in 1912, the company put her on a pension, which she enjoyed until her death in 1928.

Aside from watching the gates the Kings have little to worry them, except the floods. Last spring and the year before, high water rushed over the top of the gate and filled up the first floor of the Kings' riverside home. Now the company has built a causeway from the house across the canal, and the Kings think they are safe from future floods.

There is nothing, however, to save the channel above the gates from the ravages of high water. Gradually, say citizens of Brookmont, the towpath is being washed away, and the channel bed in some places has ceased to be well defined.

"We think it would be fine to have water back in the channel and the pathway fixed up," declared Mrs. Oscar Ecklund, of the Brookmont Civic League. "Parties of canoeists used to enjoy paddling up the stream, and hikers and horseback riders liked to use the towpath. The canal should'nt be lost, even if it isn't any longer used for commercial purposes."

To restore upper sections of the channel, "feeder" gates along the way would need be built, it is said, and once built they would have to be maintained. The tow path needs repairs, and its way cleared, and kept cleared.

Who will do these things?

The Brookmont citizens, who have spoken, would like to know. And they think there are many other residents along the canal way who would also like the answer.

Sultan Acts On Painters' Tie-up Today

Showdown Is Near in Row Over Nonunion Workers.

The controversy over the hiring of nonunion painters in two Federal buildings here, with its threat of a general union walkout on Federal projects, is due to reach the showdown stage today.

This morning at 10 o'clock, Engineer Commissioner Dan I. Sultan will attempt to end the deadlock that has been tieing up work on five District school projects and is threatening other District projects. He will preside at a conference between contractors and union representatives.

John Locher, chairman of the Building Trades Council, has charged that nonunion labor has been employed by the contractors handling three of the school projects. Union workers were called off these and two other projects as a protest.

Contractors, whose bids were accepted for the painting of the City Postoffice and the Internal Revenue Bureau have refused to establish a closed shop and have been seeking nonunion painters. The work of painting the buildings is scheduled to start today.

Union Plans Fight.

If the contractors insist on using nonunion men, the union painters here will ask the Building Trades Council, representing unions made up of nearly all organized mechanics, to call off men from other Federal projects as a protest.

The most important Federal projects now under way are the Apex Building and the annex to the Bureau of Printing and Engraving.

Over the week-end union painters were cheered when they learned that the local office of the United States Employment Service had refused to supply nonunion labor to two open-shop contractors. This action was based on a ruling by the solicitor's office of the Department of Labor.

Request Is Refused.

Acting Solicitor Gerard D Reilly, who gave the ruling at the request of W. Frank Persons, chief of the employment service, held that the service could not comply with a request from a contractor for nonunion workers, since such a request would smack of "discrimination" and therefore violate the Wagner labor relations act.

He also advised the employment service that it could not accede to a request for workers belonging to a designated union, since this would tend to encourage membership in this union and collide with section 8 of the Wagner act.

Reilly made this one exception: "If the employer, however, has made an agreement with a particular bona fide labor organization to require as a condition of employment membership in such organization (commonly known as a closed-shop agreement) then the employment service is free to accede to such a request."

Armed Bandits, Pickpockets Rob Four Men

Armed bandits and pickpockets robbed four men early yesterday as police continued to search for a dapper young stickup man who has staged more than 20 holdups here in the past few months.

John S. Hooe, 44, 805 Massachusetts avenue northeast, lost his taxicab and a small amount of change when a colored robber threatened him with a knife at First and K streets southwest.

The driver told police he was hired by the colored man at North Capitol and H streets and asked to drive to the 1100 block First street southwest. The robbery took place en route.

Police later recovered Hooe's cab at South Capitol and M streets, where it had been abandoned.

Watchman Robbed.

Two colored men attacked George Williams, 41, of 1300 Fourth street southwest, a watchman on a construction job at Tenth and Franklin streets northeast, and robbed him of $31.

Williams said he was in an alley alongside the building when he was assaulted by the men. The money was taken from his shoe, he said.

A billfold containing $20 and two $50 checks were taken from his pocket while he was riding on a New York avenue street car, James E. Godwin, 920 New York avenue northwest, told police. He said he was jostled by a man when the car stopped at Seventh and K streets northwest.

Pickpocket at Work.

George A. Brown, colored, 39 L street northwest, reported his pocket was picked of $40 while he was in the 2600 block of Georgia avenue northwest. He furnished police a description of a suspect.

Meanwhile, detectives continued their attempts to get a definite "line" on the youthful bandit who Saturday added another holdup to his list of crimes.

Doff Collar, Tie, During Heat Wave, Is Doctors' Advice

The man who strolls with his collar and tie off in this hot weather may be a pain to his haberdasher, but he is a sensible individual in the eyes of the Public Health Service.

With his neck free, our stroller gives the sweat—Public Health Service doctors don't use the daintier "perspiration"—a chance to evaporate and thereby improves his temper and perhaps avoids prostration.

"Hot weather is a physiological sock on the jaw," one surgeon said. "But if you give the body a chance to do its normal work of sweating and evaporating it from the skin you will keep cool. Sweating is the normal activity of the body to eliminate excess body heat.

"As long as sweat evaporates from the skin about as fast as it comes out any normal person is fairly comfortable. However, when it accumulates, particularly in heavy, wet clothing, a natural psychological reaction results and the person becomes irritable and hard to get along with."

Hickman, Ky., July 18 (AP).—It's the stocking strike now. Waitresses in a downtown cafe went on strike today in protest against an order by the management to wear full-length hose instead of anklets. New waitresses filled their places tonight.

Birds Prove Vast Forest Once Covered Africa, Says Scientist

That Wilderness Also Apparently Was Linked With Asian Woodlands, Dr. Friedman Believes.

Distribution of bird life in Africa offers new evidence that the "Dark Continent" once was covered by a great unbroken forest, according to Dr. Herbert Friedman, curator of birds at the Smithsonian Institution, who has just completed an exhaustive study of avian species of Ethiopia and Kenya Colony.

"The presence of a number of essentially Oriental types of birds in the forests of West Africa, and likewise of a number of mammals of Indian and Malayan affinities, suggests that there must have been a connection between the primitive African continental forests and the woods of southern Asia.

"The drying up of East Africa, with the resulting disappearance of forests there, accounts for the fact that these forms are now so widely isolated," he said.

Dr. Friedman pointed out that for some time evidence has been accumulating to show the present dense jungles of Africa are survivals of a primeval wilderness, while the vast Sahara and Kalahari deserts, as well as the great steppe and savannah areas of East Africa, are of much more recent origin.

Once the "drying up" of the continent was started, he explained, a connection between Africa and Asia by way of Asia Minor and Arabia was established and, a fully developed open country fauna was ready to cross over. Previously it would have been held back by the forests, he said.

"The exodus from the Asiatic steppes to the African grasslands," he said, "probably was a very rapid one and of a magnitude without parallel in other regions of the world."

'Elephant Boy' Registers Hit At the Rialto

Sabu and Huge Pachyderm Stars of Kipling Tale on the Screen.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"ELEPHANT BOY," Alexander Korda picturization for London Films and United Artists release of Rudyard Kipling's story of "Toomai of the Elephants," adapted to the screen by John Collier, Akos Tolnay and Marcia de Silva, starring Sabu, with W. E. Holloway, Walter Hudd, Allan Jeaves, Bruce Gordon, D. J. Williams and Hyde White. Directed by Robert Flaherty and Zoltan Korda. Previewed Wednesday, July 14. At the Rialto Theater.

A small boy and a very large elephant are the stars of this splendid film play, which boasts no romantic "love interest" but exerts a tremendous emotional power, nevertheless.

Adapted from Rudyard Kipling's story of "Toomai of the Elephants" and faithfully adhering to the spirit of that work, "Elephant Boy" is enacted by a completely masculine cast, has its setting for the greater part in the jungles of India and otherwise ignores those supposedly indispensable elements of appealing drama that enter into the structure of a majority of our modern plays of sophistication and, it must be said, artificiality. There is nothing artificial about "Elephant Boy."

With his habitual perception of engrossing drama in environments where others can see none, Robert Flaherty, producer of "Nanook of the North," "Man of Aran" and other motion-picture studies of sheer realism, has taken Kipling's simple story of a small boy who longed to become a great hunter, as all of his male forebears had been, and by the directness of his attack, the uninterrupted progression of the story and a conspicuous willingness to ignore the temptation to make his film either a study of the flora and fauna of India or a travelogue, has turned out a camera play with both grip and power.

Toomai Discovers Herd.

A British outpost in India is commissioned to round up a herd of elephants for the value of the labor, the ivory and the hides. A long trek into the jungles is necessary to locate the wild herds that have migrated to the north. Sabu, the son, grandson and great-grandson of "great hunters," persuades the white Sahib to permit him to accompany his father on the expedition. In the jungle, his father is killed by a prowling tiger and Kolontai, the mastodon of his tribe, maims a brutal tender assigned to take charge of him. The elephant is condemned to death under the jungle law of "an animal's life for a human's."

To save his companion, pet and protector, Sabu rides Kolontai away into the wilds in the dead of night. At a water hole, he discovers a huge herd of elephants, contacts the searching party from his camp, reports the near presence of hundreds of "dancing elephants" he has seen churning up the mud at the waters edge and the entire herd is stampeded into the camp stockade, thus bringing a successful culmination to a seemingly fruitless quest.

This is a mere skelton of the major movement of the story. Its appeal rests almost entirely in the amazingly fine work of the 12-year-old native lad cast in the title role and the protective sagacity of the mammoth pachyderm in which the developments of the tale almost equally center.

Is Sensitive Child Actor.

Sabu seems to have an instinctive sense of acting for the cameras and microphones. Utterly natural and unaffected, he lends the picture a poignance that is sharpened by his heart-breaking control of his grief when his father is killed and his boyish inability to master his emotions when he is hailed as their leader by all of the veteran beaters and hunters who have scoffed at his ambition to become one of them while scarcely out of his cradle. There is power in the lad's portrayal of the picture's stellar role—a power that springs from the simplicity and unblemished appeal of its performance. The costellar elephant is no less an able "actor."

The small cast, in addition to these two, is led by Walter Hudd, as the Englishman in charge of the expedition—a kindly, understanding illumination of a sympathetic and compassionate role—W. E. Holloway, as the father; Allan Jeaves, as Muchua Appa; Bruce Gordon, Rham Lahl; D. J. Williams as a veteran "hunter," and Hyde White, as the British commissioner. These roles, although played by adult actors of repute, are wholly overshadowed by the precocious performance of the role of Toomai by Sabu.

Is Photographically Excellent.

Scenically, "Elephant Boy," which yesterday inaugurated the new policy of first-run pictures at the Rialto Theater, is a thing of great beauty. The tangled and ominous threat of the jungles has been caught by the cameras with no loss of fine pictorial effect. The recording has been accomplished with comparable skill, Sabu's plaintive voice taking full command of practically every scene in which he appears—and that is practically all of them.

Robert Flaherty, with Zoltan Korda as his assistant, director again has demonstrated his eye single for the apprehension of every atom of drama to be found in the script of his play and from little frequented wilds has evolved a drama that carries both unflagging interest and conviction.

The usual short subjects and newsreel augment a feature that marks a new high point of achievement in so-called "jungle drama." I recommend that it be seen.

Actress Stars Her Director in Film

Sneaking a movie camera on a sound stage in violation of studio rules, Dolores del Rio last week filmed what is probably the greatest comedy of all time, "Gregory Ratoff in Action." Playing a spy role in "Life of a Lancer Spy," which the comical Ratoff is directing, she brought the camera on the set the second day and filmed Ratoff in color as he showed the artists how to act their scenes.

Gaumont British Deals Block-Booking a Lusty Blow By Announcing 12 "Class A" Films for Sale Singly

British Producing Company Stresses Quality Rather Than Quantity in Preferred List; 'Hollywood Premiere' Is Planned for 'The Road Back' Thursday; Another Bulky Reference Work Is Received.

WHILE in some quarters the ubiquitous problem of "block booking" continues as a sort of simmering undertone of motion picture exhibitor discontent in this country, it seems just a little incongruous that a foreign producing company should "break the ice" by announcing a flexible booking plan whereby, under certain circumstances, any one of a dozen "class A" pictures may be purchased singly in the open market.

BELL.

Probably somewhat to the consternation of certain Hollywood producers, a program of 12 "A" productions, with provisions for a limited number of additional features and a sales policy so elastic as to permit selling on a single picture basis, was outlined by Arthur A. Lee, vice president, and George W. Weeks, general manager, at the Gaumont British convention in the St. Moritz Hotel, New York, last week.

In outlining the product, Mr. Weeks was emphatic in his declaration that "the emphasis definitely will be on quality, rather than quantity, and each picture is to be made on a large scale, from the standpoints of production and star value. Because of the type of product planned, GB's selling policy will be elastic. Wherever desired by the exhibitor, the program will be sold on a picture-by-picture basis. Because we are going in for individual rather than mass production, our pictures can be handled and sold individually. We are ready to sell our whole program, but 12 highly distinctive, first-caliber productions can each be sold on its own merits."

In view of past practices among the major producing companies, this is little less than revolutionary and should do much to appease the wrath of "block buyers," insofar as their difficulties can be overcome by so limited a number of releases.

The proposed list of films upon which Gaumont British is relying to put in force this liberalization of booking policy is as follows:

"Non-Stop New York;" romantic melodrama set in New York City and aboard a transatlantic plane. Starring Anna Lee, with John Loder, Desmond Tester, James Pirrie, Frances Sullivan and Frank Cellier.

"Sailing Along;" a Jessie Matthews musical, with Jack Whiting as her masculine lead and dancing partner.

"Look Out for Love;" musical, starring Anna Neagle and Tullio Carminati.

"Empty World;" mystery melodrama, starring Nova Pilbeam, in an adult role.

"The Show Goes On;" melodrama, starring Anna Neagle with Tullio Carminati and Leslie Banks.

"Sparkle;" a second Jessie Matthews musical in which spectacular dance numbers and emphasis on comedy are promised.

"A Girl Must Live;" romantic comedy starring Anna Lee with Lilli Palmer, Viennese star.

"Wedding Dream;" romantic comedy starring Nova Pilbeam.

"Glamorous Lady;" Jessie Matthews' third for the season in which she will play a society beauty.

"The Unconquered Woman;" with Anna Lee starred in a screen drama written especially for her.

"Lady of La Paz;" based on the stage play of that name which was adapted from the Elinor Mordaunt novel. No selection has been made for the screen role.

"The Girl Pat;" based on a recent event which received much newspaper attention.

This list seems to emphasize, among other things, the high esteem in which her producers hold Jessie Matthews as a prime box-office favorite. It also will answer the many inquiries that have come to this desk of late as to what may have happened to Tullio Carminati, absent from the American screen too long, judging from the anxiety as to his whereabouts. It may be said in this connection that all of the queries concerning Mr. Carminati have come from those of distaff persuasion.

Over the week-end there came to hand another valued addition to this department's technical library in the form of the 1937-38 International Motion Picture Almanac, a Quigley publication of imposing proportions. Despite the time of year—this sort of thing usually is reserved for the height of the midwinter season—there will be a typical "Hollywood premiere" at RKO-Keith's Theater on Thursday night of this week.

With flags flying, a military band in steel helmets filling the air with stirring music and members of the President's Cabinet, both houses of the Congress, the Diplomatic Corps and Washington's society and business circles in attendance, Universal's production of Erich Maria Remarque's "The Road Back," a sequel to "All Quiet on the Western Front," will be accorded its first Washington presentation. The gala inaugural will be at 8:45 p. m.

Just as "All Quiet" etched in vivid outline the experience of a group of youngsters assigned to the front line trenches, so does "The Road Back," with reputedly comparable realism, depict the struggles of the survivors of this group of youthful soldiers to adjust themselves to the twisted demands of peace. The "'road back" for them is a constant and a bitter struggle—one that has results almost as tragic as those of the shattering barrages and hand-to-hand conflicts encountered on the battlefields and in No Man's Land.

The action of "The Road Back" has its inception on Armistice Day and comes down through the later days of readjustment—more often than not maladjustment. It was adapted to the screen by R. C. Sherriff, author of "Journey's End," and Charles Kenyon, with James Whale as the director—virtually the same technical sponsorship as made "All Quiet" the prize-winning production of its seasson. Many of the cast of the earlier picture appear in its sequel.

By a last-minute change in bookings—consummated too late to permit of correction in Sunday's announcements—"Easy Living," featuring Jean Arthur and Edward Arnold, will be the next attraction on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater, instead of the popular-price showing of "The Good Earth," costarring Paul Muni and Luise Rainer. "Easy Living" is described as a "daffy" comedy that may be relied upon to capture the mood of what is colloquially known as "the silly season" in the theater. Ray Milland, Luis Alberni and Mary Nash also are in the cast. So now you know.

A child star of yesterday and one of tomorrow—Buddy Messinger and 4-year-old Kitty Clancy—appear together in "Midnight Madonna," coming to the Earle screen on Friday. Not so many years ago, Buddy topped the list of young screen players and his earnings put him definitely in the star class. Little Kitty is just launching a career executives believe will put her at the head of the juvenile list. She is making her first appearance in a featured role in this picture.

The Variety Club and The Washington Post are staging a big charity boxing show tomorrow night. Better get your tickets now.

Gets Rare Watch.

Della Lind was presented with a diamond watch that has a thin-cut sapphire for a crystal instead of the usual clear crystal. It is easy to see the numerals, and yet the gem doesn't look like the face of a watch, but more like a jeweled bracelet. The watch came from Vienna.

Loses Treasure.

When Freddie Bartholomew attended the Village Theater in Westwood the other evening, he lost the pride of his possessions, a seven-blade ivory knife. On calling the theater, the young M-G-M star was informed that the knife had been recovered. He rushed right over to get it.

Back to His Old Stamping Ground

The smiling young man pictured above will be recognized as Bert Frohman, former master of ceremonies at the Palace Theater, in the olden days of stage presentations at that house, and this week a featured artist on the vaudeville portion of the program at Loew's Capitol Theater. Although a raconteur of the first water, Bert confines himself to singing on this visit and scores one of the hits of the bill presided over by Red Skelton. It was Bert Frohman who appeared with the late Jean Harlow when she made her first personal appearance at the Palace.

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDLER

Hollywood, July 19.—Idol Chatter: Wonder why so many 10,000-dollar a week screen stars profess to be red-hot Socialists? Bet Jean Arthur would get more publicity if her non-professional husband would quit censoring her interviews. Peas from the same pod: Fernand Gravet and the Duke of Windsor. I've learned not to play "truth" with Dixie Crosby—there's a girl who never pulls her punches. You can tell Loretta Young and her sister, Sally Blane, apart without staring at their faces, because Sally's ankles are the more shapely.

JEAN ARTHUR.

The best unscreened comedy in Hollywood: Andy Devine's hilarious imitation of an elephant with a piece of chewing gum on his foot. Johnny Downs is the only member of the original "Our Gang" still active in pictures. Every time I see Warren William I expect to hear him spout Hamlet's soliloquy. If you don't believe Alice Faye is naturally that blonde, you ought to see her mother. Passing thought: A lazy star's contract seldom is exercised.

The quickest way to get from one place to another is to ride with Anita Louise. Candidate for the most gorgeous figure: Eleanor Whitney. Study in contrast: Shirley Temple and Lupe Velez—they both made their debuts in Hal Roach comedies. Never meet Henry Armetta, but what my mouth waters for a spaghetti dinner. Wonder why studio stenographers usually look better dressed than most screen stars?

Leafing through a three-year-old fan magazine while I waited in a dentist's ante-room, I ran across an article in which Clark Gable, with amazing courage, had named the ten "most beautiful" women in Hollywood. His list included, in the order named: Mrs. Clark Gable (now practically ex), Norma Shearer, Joan Crawford, Kay Francis, Jean Harlow, Claudette Colbert, Greta Garbo, Grace Moore, Helen Hayes and Lily Pons.

You know, search as I might, I couldn't find Carole Lombard's name anywhere in the list.

Richard Arlen, as you have probably read time and again, drifted to Hollywood from the Texas oil fields, found a job chauffeuring a motorcycle for a film laboratory, was injured in an accident and decided while recuperating to try his luck as an actor. That much of this little story is old—but I like the ending, for it is gratifying to find a Hollywood success who still remembers a humble beginning.

Yesterday I was riding along the boulevard with Dick when he happened to pass a motorcycle messenger boy. "There," said Dick grimly, "but for the grace of God and a broken leg, goes Richard Arlen himself."

Freddie Bartholomew assures me that he has found a new way to escape from his classes (guess he is just a regular kid, after all). Seems that he and his private tutor went horseback riding in the Hollywood hills and next day the teacher developed such a bad case of poison oak that he was ordered to the hospital. "The doctor says that I'm immune," said Freddie, "and I'm sure I remember which trail we took."

Helen Troy, that very funny telephone operator you have laughed at in so many pictures, has the perfect "What-number-please" twang in her voice, but she has never been an operator, off-screen. "I'd starve before I'd run a switchboard," she told me the other day. "I've been teamed with a switchboard ever since I came to Hollywood. I hate the darned things!"

Little

"Anna Karenina," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's picturization of one of Count Leo Tolstoy's most widely read tragic love stories, revived on the screen at the Little Theater yesterday for a week's engagement, in the view of this department is one of Greta Garbo's most distinguished vehicles. It presents a wide variety of mood and investiture and is a moving, poignant tale of a wife's disturbed quest of happiness and contentment she never finds.

Having played the part as a silent contribution to the cinema, Garbo, of course, is familiar with every demand of the title role. Her interpretation is one of dignity, emotional intensity and great frocefulness. Frederic March, in the pivotal male character of Vronsky, is introduced as a swash buckling officer of the Czar's army, but later transforms his performance into an eloquent limning of a young man desperately in love and fatally stubborn.

The supporting cast is composed of players of the first rank, led by Freddie Bartholomew, as Anna's small son; Basil Rathbone, as the unforgiving husband; Maureen O'Sullivan, May Robson, Reginald Owen, Phoebe Foster, Ethel Griffies, Harry Beresford, Sarah Padden, Cora Sue Collins and numerous others.

The Tolstoy novel was adapted to the screen by Clemence Dane, eminent English playwright, and Salka Viertel. It was directed with consummate skill by Clarence Brown.

The new bill at the Little is completed by a diversified list of short-reel subjects and a new issue of the newsreel.

New York, July 18.

DRAMA DEPARTMENT: Father Will Whalen of the old Jesuit Mission in Orrtanna, Adams County, Pa., has sent me this story . . . There are no telegraph offices in the town of his residence, and so messages are telephoned to the addressee—on a party-line where the whole community can listen in. Last week the phone operator called him and began: "I have a message for you: Hello Sweetheart" . . . "What was that?" replied the shocked priest . . . "Hello Sweetheart," the operator repeated . . . "Is that all?" asked the mountain pastor . . . "No," was the reply. "The full message is 'Hello Sweetheart. Send your play, "The Ex-Nun," immediately. Kind regards'" . . . The message had been sent by the famed producer, who uses "Hello Sweetheart" as a salutation in messages to all his friends. The producer is A. H. Woods.

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, ETC.: Le Winson won the title of "New York's Most Henpecked Husband" at the Village Brewery Tuesday night . . . Mr. Winson will be sued by his wife for a Reno divorce . . . The charge—cruelty.

LOCAL NEWS: Katharine Dayton, the satirist, who co-authored "First Lady," has finished a comedy about exiled royalty under a dictatorship. The title is "Save Me the Waltz" . . . Moss Hart returns to New York August 1 . . . Contrary to reports, Sidney Kingsley hasn't as yet sold his new story to Goldwyn. It's a fantasy theme, and Kingsley isn't satisfied with it yet . . . The physicians who operated upon George Gershwin assured his family that even if the operation for the removal of a brain tumor had been a success, Gershwin could not have lived another year.

Barbara Stanwyck arrived, with her fox terrier on leash. The terrier sat up and extended its paw. "Well, here's one sincere handshake," Miss Stanwyck assured . . . "True," Janet agreed, "but, at that—with him it's only a trick."*

OBITUARY DEPT.: The New York Times on Wednesday carried a four-line report that Max Krauthammer, a New York attorney, had been killed in action while fighting for the loyalists in Spain . . . Krauthammer was a labor lawyer, and most of his practice was devoted to protecting the interests of workers without compensation. During one trial, where he defended a picketer charged with inciting to riot, the attorney cross-examined the arresting officer, who insisted that the picketer shouted: "Go get him!" . . . "How loudly did he yell?" Krauthammer asked. "Go ahead and scream as loudly as you say he did" . . . The officer screamed. Krauthammer placed the defendant on the stand—a deaf-mute.

MUSIC DEPT.: When Mr. and Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., sailed to Europe, they carried with them 50 copies of "You Are the Reason for My Love Song"—the theme song composed for their wedding. Mr. Roosevelt practically has become a song plugger for that tune. He took the copies with him to distribute to European bandleaders whom he'll induce to play the song.

BUSINESS DEPT.: La Verne Moore, who for seven years posed as the Mysterious Montague in Hollywood and who is being extradited to New York, is willing to reveal the mystery of his life. A syndicate is offering his story for sale to the newspapers.

• • • •

SPORTS DEPT.: The Mysterious Montague will admit to this story! He beat an opponent at golf and the loser insisted that he'd win, if he could drive as well as Montague could. "Okay," was the agreement, "we'll play the regular rules, except that I'll drive the ball for you and you'll drive for me." The bets were made and after 17 holes it was all even. At the eighteenth tee, the opponent drove the ball 10 feet. "I'm sorry," was his gleeful apology, "but that's the best I can do for you. You'll have to play it from there. Now let's see you drive for me" . . . . Montague then drove the ball 300 yards—in the opposite direction!

Dancer Can'tResist 'Cleaner' Salesmen

Ray Bolger is a "push-over" for vacuum cleaner salesmen. He has a closet full of the contraptions. Most of them have never been used.

He isn't a vacuum cleaner collector. He doesn't treasure them as he would a dancing trophy. He hates them! But he buys them. He can't turn a good vacuum cleaner salesman down.

Salesmen have found this weakness. The actor-dancer can't forget when he too was a vacuum cleaner salesman. So now he buys vacuums at the drop of a salestalk. Good ones, bad ones and some that look like coffee grinders. He buys them all.

"I just can't turn 'em down," he declares.

Cape-and-Dress for Vacation Ensemble

JoanCrawfordUses Daisy in Hairdress

A lone daisy makes the cleverest of hair ornaments for page boy bobs, according to Joan Crawford, who adopts this coiffure adornment in her new picture, "The Bride Wore Red."

A single, white Shasta daisy, of medium size, is fastened on the right side of the head and the pin that secures it also holds stray locks with a tendency to blow in the breeze.

Miss Crawford recommends this flower ornament for wear with summer formals.

Birthday Party.

Eleanor Powell said "Happy Birthday" to Nelson Eddy with a big kiss. Charles Igor Gorin, Ruby Mercer, Eadie Adams and Cliff Edwards made up a quartet to sing the birthday song to the star.

Still Running.

George Murphy was a championship runner at Yale University and then took a job as a runner on Wall Street when he finished school. Now he's running down crooks in "London by Night."

Music Classic Stars InNew PictureIdea

For the first time in screen history, a tune will be the star of a picture.

This starred tune is Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody. It is star and principal character of a new idea in pictures, an interpretation, in color, of the music.

A special arrangement of the classic was orchestrated and conducted by Nathaniel W. Finston. As the music is heard, bursts of colors, swelling, diminishing, and seeking to interpret to the eye what the music means to the ear, will flash on the screen. Otto Fischinger, European colorist, is working out the photographic interpretations of the music. Jack Chertok is producing the unusual short subject for M-G-M.

Sixteenth Stage Dedicated by Film

Dedication of the last of six new sound stages was made at the 20th Century-Fox studio when cameras ground on Jack Haley, Ann Sothern, Mary Boland and Edward Everett Horton for a scene in "Danger—Love at Work."

With the completion of this new, air-conditioned building, the 20th Century-Fox studio now has sixteen of the most modern and completely equipped sound stages to be found in any film plant. Plans for the immediate erection of an additional group of stages already are under way.

Mule's Tail Swings To MusicalRhythm

Musical education of a mule not only occupied three trainers, but pianist Margaret Hart, and Allan Jones as well. They had to teach the mule to swing his tail in time to Jones' song in "The Firefly."

Jones sang. The piano tinkled. The trainers took turns swinging the caudal appendage until the mule got the idea, and swung it himself. Finally, the scene was recorded perfectly.

The M-G-M studios say that the animal is the only swing-time mule in the movies.

Rides Bike!

Sophie Tucker, since she arrived in Hollywood for her role in "Broadway Melody of 1938," has started to ride a bicycle for exercise.

Under Protest.

Buddy Ebsen, featured in "Broadway Melody of 1938," went to dancing school under protest, because he thought dancing was "sissified."

Playing Days Over for Cochrane

By Shirley Povich.

Detroit, Mich., July 18.—Displaying, with a slight shudder, X-ray photographs of his cracked skull, which resembled a road map more than anything else, Gordon Stanley Cochrane said this afternoon that he guessed his playing days were at an end.

Fifty days ago, on May 28, when a fast ball pitched by Bump Hadley came out of the shadows of Yankee Stadium, the Tiger's manager was carried off the field and today, as he sat in a field box in Navin Field, was the first time he had seen his team in action since.

POVICH.

His doctors didn't want to hamper his recovery by mentioning that they would never permit him to don a mask again, but since his discharge from the hospital, they have been more explicit. Mickey knows now that he's never going to get closer to a ball game than the manager's spot on the bench or the coaching lines.

* * * *

All during his six weeks in the hospital, he had an idea that he'd play ball some more some time. He had been hurt before—broken legs, fractured fingers, a broken nose—and they told him his recovery would be complete. And then the other day, they pulled out those X-ray pictures on him. "Gee," said Mike. "Is that my head?"

* * * *

With forced smiles his doctors told him yeah, it was a picture of his skull with its triple fracture, one break extending around the back of his head nearly from ear to ear. Mickey said he didn't know he was hurt that bad, but the doctors assured him his recovery was complete.

* * * *

But they didn't tell him that that kind of a compound break usually leaves a guy with some weakness in his senses—usually his hearing or sight. Mickey's eyesight in the past couple of years was not so good anyway, and the doctors said they wouldn't be surprised that Mickey got hit in the head with Hadley's pitch because his sight on that day was not all that it should have been.

* * * *

On the day Mickey was well enough to listen to the radio, he tuned on one of the Tiger's games. And then, after an inning, he tuned right out again. "It was no fun," he said.

* * * *

"Gee, I can't stand this," said Mike. "How do those other people? These radio fellows make it too exciting—for me, anyway. Build you up to a big let-down most of the time."

* * * *

Catching was Cochrane's livelihood for more than ten years during which he caught more than 1,000 games for Connie Mack, but now that he is forced to hang up his mask and protector, his financial future is secure, nevertheless.

* * * *

For Cochrane will not only continue as bench manager of the Detroit club, but will hold office also as its vice president. For those duties he is paid $45,000 per season, drawing a larger salary than any other man in baseball.

* * * *

As vice president of the Tigers, Mike has an office adjoining that of owner, Walter O. Briggs, the automobile body manufacturer, who took over the controlling interest in the Tigers when his partner, Frank Navin, died. Mickey's office is appointed in the height of modernistic fashion and he has a powerful voice in all affairs of the Detroit Club. He is virtually the only manager in the league except Connie Mack who can spend the club's money for talent without even consulting the owner.

* * * *

But on one score Mickey has always played the Vice Presidential game smartly. That is in dealing with the contracts of his players. Cochrane keeps a respectful distance in all salary matters. His players must thrash those out with Mr. Briggs himself.

"I don't want any part of that salary business," says Mickey. "It is the one thing that might cause trouble between a manager and his players. A manager ought to keep out of all salary squabbles. You know a manager has to live with the players—a club owner doesn't."

* * * *

Intestinal 'Flu' Hits Buddy Lewis

Detroit, July 18.—Groggy from eight straight defeats, the Washington club suffered another blow today when Thirdbaseman Buddy Lewis was confined to the Nat's hotel with an attack of intestional influenza.

Stricken suddenly, young Lewis is under treatment by Detroit doctors, who describe his case as mild. Barring complications, he is expected to return to the lineup within a week.

Giants Take Double Bill From Cards

Hubbell, Schumacher in Form as Mates Clout Out Victories.

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 18.—The Giants turned their "crucial" series with the St. Louis Cardinals into a pushover today, winning both ends of a doubleheader, 6 to 5 and 11 to 0.

The twin win, achieved through the pitching of King Carl Hubbell and "Prince" Hal Schmuacher and heavy hitting in both games, kept the New Yorkers right on the heels of the Chicago Cubs in the National League race.

Hubbell allowed nine hits in the opener as the Giants came from behind with a three-run splurge in the fourth inning. Mel Ott clouted his nineteenth homer and Lou Chiozza also hit for the circuit. Rookie Don Padgett belted a houndtripper for the cards.

The nightcap proved personal vindication for Schumacher, who has been mourned as "through" by the experts. Not only did he pitch his first full game since June 1 and his first shutout of the year, in holding the cards to nine hits, but he connected for four hits, one of them a homer. Sambo Leslie and Harry Danning also hit homers.

Adair and Goeltz Win Lehigh Title

Buddy Adair, youthful local star and Buddy Goeltz, well-known Wilkes-Barre player, yesterday continued their triumphal Eastern invasion as a doubles team winning the Lehigh Valley tennis championship at Easton over the highly regarded team of Fritz Mercur and Hillton.

The scores were 4—6, 6—3, 6—3, 4—6, 6—3. Mercur, a former nationally ranked player and Hillton, former Lehigh University captain, were favored but could not match the spirited play of their younger opponents.

DiMaggio's Homer Wins For Yankees

60,000 Fans See Tribe Humbled, 5 to 1, in Final Frame.

Cleveland, July 18 (AP).—Slugging Joe DiMaggio defeated blazing Bob Feller today before 60,000 persons when the New York outfielder's ninth inning home run with the bases full gave the Yankees a 5-to-1 victory over the Cleveland Indians.

It was the youthful speed ball hurler's fourth defeat in his four official major league starts.

Feller threw the Yankees a hail of strikes. He mastered them all—all but "DiMag."

He allowed but seven hits and DiMaggio got three of them. He hurled seven strikeouts. But his own ninth inning error made possible the four runs that resulted. The fifth run against him was literally kicked in.

Charley Ruffing kept the eight hits he yielded well scattered. He led off in the ninth with a single. Crosetti sacrificed but Feller threw low to first and both runners were safe. A pass to Rolfe filled the bases.

Cubs Beat Dodgers Twice to Keep Lead

Hartnett's Crew Retains Slim Hold on First Place With 7-to-6 and 9-to-4 Victories Over Brooklyn Club.

By the Associated Press.

Brooklyn, July 18.—The Chicago Cubs poled out 26 hits today to sweep a double-header with the Dodgers, 7 to 6 and 9 to 4, and retain their slim grip on first place in the National League.

They called on their perennial life-saver, old Charley Root, to stop a threatening Brooklyn rally in the ninth inning and save the opener in which they hit Van Mungo and two other Dodger pitchers for a dozen safe blows.

Curt Davis went the full nine innings in the nightcap for the first time this year and breezed in with victory after the Cubs belted Starter Fred Frankhouse out and piled up five runs in the sixth inning.

Augie Galan hit a homer in each game to lead the attack, although Frank Demaree had four safe hits in the opener, driving in two runs, and young Ken O'Dea also belted a homer in the first game, sending three runs in.

Excluding the pitchers, every man on the Cub lineup hit safely at least once in each game, except Ripper Collins, who was blanked in the opener and then collected two hits in the nightcap, driving in four runs.

The Cubs blasted Mungo to the showers so fast in the opener that they had three runs by the time he pitched to six batters. It was apparent that the sore shoulder which has bothered Mungo since a few days before the All-Star game, was still ailing.

In the nightcap, the Dodgers never had a chancce, although they led 2-1 up to the fourth. The sixth inning spree put the game on ice for keeps.

Johnson's Circuit Blow Wins for Horning, 10-9

Secondbaseman Johnson poled a home run in the ninth inning yesterday to enable Horning Jewelers to defeat the Clarendon A. C., 10-9, in an Old Dominion League game on the latter's field.

Sports Postscripts

STRICTLY ABOUT THE BIG FIGHT TOMORROW NIGHT: . . . FREDDIE STEELE'S full name is FREDERICK EARL STEELE . . . only a great fighter like the middleweight champion can get away with calling your scribe "Bushy" . . . or "Curly" . . . MAJOR ERNEST BROWN, head of the District's blue coated guardians of the law, has beeen giving careful consideration to the problem of handling the crowds expected at Griffith Stadium for the District's outstanding fight card . . . and has worked out a very satisfactory solution . . . there will be no delay in traffic either to or from the ball park . . . one of the most dazzling tattoos on the arms of HOBO WILLIAMS is a picture of JACK SHARKEY . . . who is the Hobo's fistic idol . . . another picture on his skin shows POPEYE . . . the patron saint of practically every fighter in the business . . . movie crooners will figure prominently on the card, not only is Steele comanaged by BING CROSBY . . . but HENRY ARMSTRONG, the uncrowned featherweight champion, is half controlled by AL JOLSON . . . Armstrong it not fighting on the card, having previously been signed to do battle against LEW MASSEY in New York tonight . . . but he will be a guest of honor.

The day following his fight with Williams, Steele and his manager, DAVE MILLER, will leave by automobile for the Coast . . . BUTCH, the camp cook, will fix them up a big batch of the fried chicken of which they have become so fond . . . and they will try to make it back to Tacoma, Wash., in three days . . . or less . . . or maybe not at all at that speed.

Williams will dissipate as soon as the bout is over by indulging in as many large milk shakes as he can possibly down . . . because he is making weight and because he wishes to be as fast as possible. The Hobo has been forced to forego this—his favorite vice—during his long training siege . . . except on one or two occasions when he seemed to be getting too light . . .

Steele, 'Hobo' Await Gong Confidently

Both Fighters in Prime Condition for Bout at Ball Park.

By Bill McCormick

Cocked and primed by long and arduous training campaigns, Middleweight Champion Freddie Steele and Contender Hobo Williams—headliners on Washington's greatest fight card—are prepared to fire knockout punches at each other in the Griffith Stadium fighting pit tomorrow night.

Not satisfied with having matched the most sensational 160-pound champion since the days of Stanley Ketchell with the roughest, toughest challenger he has ever faced, the promoters have arranged a supporting card so outstanding that every bout could serve as a main event under ordinary cricumstances.

Joey Archibald, the little battamweight who has established himself the No. 1 local ring favorite by winning four fights here in as many appearances, will be called upon to face Harry Gentile, a Connecticut featherweight from whom Archibald has run on two occasions, in a 10-round semifinal.

Everett to Meet Hogan.

An eight-round preliminary will find Buck Everett, long a great heavyweight favorite in the District, swapping swats with Eddie Hogan, Jack Dempsey's newest protege.

Walter Woods, tenth-ranking middleweight contender, will make passes at Mickey Flannegan, Williams' chief sparmate, in a six-rounder. In another six, Max Roesch, the Dallas lad whom many have tagged as the coming heavyweight champion, will take on Eddie Caddorre, who scored sensationally over Murray Kanner in the last program of punch at Mr. Griffith's ball yard.

A four-rounder between Frankie DeAngelo and Billy Bullock, local featherweights, will open the show.

Almost as much interest will be centered on the celebrities at the ringside as on the outstanding fighters who are to perform within the squared circle. Henry Armstrong, the little colored lad who virtually rules the featherweight division, will be among those on hand when Williams starts trying to upset the middleweight titleholder.

Jolson to See Fights.

Al Jolson, comanager of Armstrong, will make a flying trip to watch the activity, as will Eddie Mead, who holds the other half of Henry's contract.

Jack Dempsey, the old man mauler in person, has purchased a bunch of tickets and, business permitting, will be on hand with Mrs. Dempsey. Benny Leonard, and perhaps Mickey Walker, will be at the ringside.

Vince Dundee, the former middleweight champion whose defeat by Steele started the present titleholder toward the top, probably will be on hand to get a glimpse of the battler who floored him 13 times in three rounds.

Senators Nye and Hale and Representative Magnussen will head a large delegation from Congress. Big Jim Farley, Postmaster General, and other important statesmen, will be present if official duties permit.

Marvin McIntyre, secretary to the President, will represent the White House, and J. Edgar Hoover, chief G-Man, and several members of his staff will watch the battle.

Commissioners to Attend.

District Commissioners George Allen and Melvin Hazen will head the local delegation.

The entire international rating committee of the National Boxing Association will be present to watch

Wild Heaves In 1st Inning Bring Defeat

Detroit Crew Puts Game on Ice Early With Three Runs.

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

Detroit, Mich., July 18.—The plight of those hapless wights known as the Nats reached the incredible stage today when they were slapped down for the eighth straight time on an afternoon when Monte Weaver held the Detroit Tigers to two hits.

No kidding, that's what happened, Weaver pitched a two-hit game and lost. He lost because two Detroit runs seeped through a wanton Washington defense in a wild first inning and provided the Tigers with the winning margin on a 3-to-1 ball game.

He lost, too, because his colleagues who have been hitting nothing but new lows on this Western trip, obligingly struck out for the 25,000 Detroit fans on two occasions with the base loaded and otherwise contrived to leave 12 runners to perish on the bases.

Win on Wild Throws.

The Nats were out of the ball game almost before they were in it. The only Detroit hit, aside from Rogell's single in the sixth, started an uproarious stampeded in Detroit's opening inning and with Gee Walker scampering around the bases behind two pals on the impetus of a pair of wild throws, the Tigers won the ball game.

Monte had two men out when the fun began for the 25,000 in the stands. Charley Gehringer drew a walk and so did Hank Greenberg. Then it was that Walker made half of Detroit's hits for the day—a single through the box that sent Gehringer scurrying home from second base.

But, that wasn't all. Ossie Bluege at third base, muffed Almada's throw from center field and the ball bounded against the left field boxes. Whereupon, Greenberg didn't stop at third but raced for home. He made it, too, before Weaver could recover the ball in foul territory.

And Walker Scores.

All of this time, Walker wasn't standing still. He was rounding third when Weaver found the ball and then headed for home. He made it, too, because Weaver, with an easy out in front of him, pitched the pellet 6 feet over Catcher Rick Ferrell's head and the Tigers had their third run of the inning on one hit.

Poor Monte and the Nats never recovered from that sad display. Gallantly Weaver went back to his pitching and only three other Tiers reached base all afternoon. Ultimately he was relieved by Ed Linke when the need of a pinch hitter forced Weaver from the game in the eighth.

The Nats outhit the Tigers 3 to 1—or 6 to 1, to be exact—but they were a forlorn crew today. Only Al Simmons' terrific home-run blast that landed atop a turret top beyond the leftfield fence in the sixth inning averted a second successive shutout for the Washingtonians.

Ring False Alarms.

The Nats could have used that home run in several better spots, but Simmons was never at the plate at a time when the Nats could pluck a cluster of runs out of the proceedings. They had the rookie left-hander of the Tigers, Jake Wade, releasing and ready for the finishing socks in the fifth and again in the sixth, but succeeded only in ringing two loud false alarms.

Young Wade was wild all afternoon and for a moment in the fifth, when the Nats filled the bases with one out, the 25,000 were begging the Tiger management to give him the hook. He loaded the bags by walking Almada, pitching a centerfield single to Bluege and then walking Kuhel.

But Johnny Stone met this emergency by striking out, even as he had done the day before, under similar circumstances. And Cecil Travis obligingly grounded to Gehringer.

After Simmons' homer had cut the Tigers' lead to 3 to 1, the Nats had Wade on the ropes again. Mi-

1,500 See Leo Walper's 69 Pace Pros in Manor Club Exhibition Match

MacKenzie, Treder Bow on Final Green

Cox-Diffenbaugh One Up Victors; Barnett Pairs With Walper to Rout Spencer and Shorey; Local Golf Club Results.

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

Before the largest crowd to witness a local golf exhibition since the visit of the Spalding troupe to Kenwood, Leo Walper, the driving range mentor from Bethesda, fired a sub-par 69 at Manor yesterday and paced seven other local professionals to a sweepstakes victory in the double-exhibition matches over the Norbeck course.

Pairing with Bob Barnett, the Chevy Chase pro, they scored a best ball of 31-31, 62, to trounce Cliff Spencer and Mel Shorey, 3 and 2, as Wiffy Cox and George Diffenbaugh were eking out a one-hole margin over Roland MacKenzie and the host club hope, Al Treder.

Trailing Walper by a stroke in the sweepstakes was his partner, Barnett, who played the long back nine in 34 strokes, one under par, for a 70. Two strokes back, victim of an incoming 38, was Wiffy Cox, at 72, who led Cliff Spencer by a one stroke margin. Spencer, after a sub-par 33 on the woods nine struck a pair of sixes on 14 and 15 and finished with a 40 and 73.

Treder Has 74.

Treder and Shorey, matched at 74s, were trailed by Roland MacKenzie at 75 and Diffenbaugh, 76.

Some 1,500 golf enthusiasts followed the play and were treated to an afternoon of sensational shooting, including two eagles on the par 5 fifteenth hole and a near ace on the eighth.

Walper, with birdies on two, seven and nine, and 1 over par bogeys on three and five, was a stroke behind Spencer and tied with Cox as the foursomes left the woody course. A birdie on eleven sent his score 2 under par, and a putt across the green on fifteen for an eagle left him with par for a 66. He slipped a stroke over perfect figures on the three remaining holes, to finish in 69.

Cox went over par on three of the last four holes to blow his chances for his second victory in the sweeps. Spencer, with three birdies and a missed 3-foot putt on the ninth, was out in 33 and 2 under through thirteen before he hit the sixes.

One Up at Turn.

Cox and Diffenbaugh were one up at the turn and even after 16 holes with MacKenzie and Treder, but Wiffy's 4 on the par 3 seventeenth was good for a win, as the opposition each went 2 over par. MacKenzie 3-putted and Tredor pushed his tee shot in the woods. Diffenbaugh halved the home hole in 4s with the host pro for the one up margin of victory.

Spencer and Shorey held their own on the first nine, halving the Barnett-Walper duo's best ball of 31, but they could not match the winners' score on the back nine and bowed by the 3 and 2 margin. The best-ball scores, excepting the winner's 62, were all tied at 67.

Treder, heavy favorite of the galleries, gave his backers a pair of thrills on the eighth hole when his tee shot lipped the cup for an ace and stopped a fraction of an inch past the hole. The other incident was on the fifteenth when his second wood shot on the par 5 hole stopped less than 3 feet from the pin.

Mel Shorey made the greatest comeback of the day's rounds by playing out of the center of the woods on the third hole to the edge of the green and holing the putt for a birdie 3 that gave his team a temporary lead.

T. R. Taylor, shooting rounds of 84 and 90 and aided by a 21 handicap on each score, shared the lead with J. N. Nesbitt at the halfway mark in play for the Japanese Ambassador's trophy at Kenwood.

Taylor's net was 132 and Nesbitt's 85-20, 65, 87-20, 67, 132. Two strokes back of the co-leaders, tied at 134, was John Bergelin, 71-6, 65, 75-8—69, 134, and W. A. Wooley, 81-17, 64, 87-17, 70, 134. The defending champion, M. Karaki, was 12 strokes back at 144.

M. B. Stevens, with a net 65, won the medal play sweepstakes at the Washington club yesterday, shooting 81-16. John S. Nicoll was second with 81-14, 67, and Dr. J. C. Bradley third, 84-16, 68.

R. R. Hair won the gross prize by scoring a 76, six over perfect figures.

Mrs. Berne Simmons and C. A. Stewart were mixed Scotch foursome victors at Congressional, with a net of 76½, fashioned from a gross 95 and 18½ handicap. Mrs. Dan Foreman and A. C. Paul trailed by two strokes, with 103-24½—78½.

Mr. and Mrs. Otto Elble won the gross prize with a 90.

Howard Nordlinger won his weekly prize at Woodmont yesterday; this time it was in the medal play sweepstakes with a net 71. The Bethesda sharpshooter was 75 with a four handicap. Dave Schwartz, 83-10—73, and Al Schneider, 85-11—74, were other class A winners.

Victors in the B class included George Jacobson, 93-18—75; Stanley Fisher, 93-18—75, and Harry Coonin, 97-22—75.

G. Thompson with a low net of 128 for 36 holes paced the Army and Navy Club entrants in the Newman trophy play. Thompson scored rounds of 74 and 84, with a 15 handicap each round.

Col. S. L. Howard was second, subtracting an 11 handicap from rounds of 76 and 75, for a net of 129. Play will continue through next Saturday, over the 36-hole route.

---

R. A. McGinn is the new senior's champion of the Argyle Club, leading the contestants with a 44-44—88 over the weekend's play. Sidney Sherwood was second.

---

Miss Joyce Troutman, with a gross of 79, won the Tom Moore cup at the Capitol Club yesterday. A two-way tie for the runner-up prize existed between Mrs. James Daniels and Mrs. R. K. Aten at 82.

---

Buddy Sharkey paced the Indian Springs Tribal Bowl participants into the semifinal round of the annual play for the trophy at the Four Corners Club. Sharkey defeated Russell Jewell in the first round, 2 and 1, and won his second-round match over Louis Semla, 5 and 4.

---

The Beaver Dam member's assault on the par four holes with eagle deuces was continued yesterday. This time G. C. Strong holed his second shot on the par 4 eleventh hole, measuring 313 yards, while playing with his brother, J. P. Strong, F. B. Hessler and J. F. Child.

---

Scoring three points in the final foursome to overcome a two-point lead, the Officers Club of Quantico, Va., defeated a visiting team from the Argyle Club yesterday, 11 to 10. The defeat avenged a previous loss at Silver Spring.

Ridderhoff and Baur, the professional and number one amateur of the hosts, won two points from club champion Jock Olmsted and Lou Harrison, of Argyle, in the feature match.

Quantico, 11; Argyle, 10.

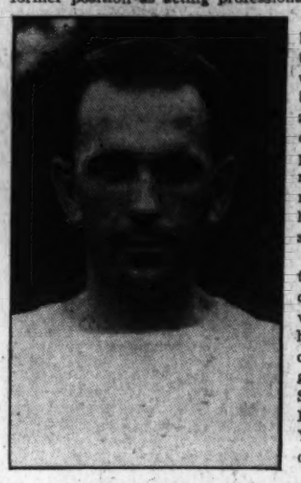
Ridderhoff and Bauer (Quantico), defeated Harrison and Olmsted, 2 points to 1; Puryear and Kline (Quantico), defeated Harvey and Cooper, 2 points to 1; Willmett and Gibson (Argyle), defeated Brown and Smith, 2½ points to ½; Travelyan and A. Zarracina, jr. (Quantico), defeated Bohlander and Fox, 3 points to 0. Arnold and Peebles (Argyle), defeated A. Zarracina, sr., and Byrd, 3 points to 0; Gardner and Phillips (Argyle), defeated Shapley and Pefley, 2½ points to ½; McFarland and Picke (Quantico), defeated Brosseau and Chick, 3 points to 0.

Cliff Spencer, Beaver Dam's Pro, Recalls Resignation

Cliff Spencer, the colorful Beaver Dam professional who upset the local golfing world by resigning from the Landover club last week, will recall his resignation today and may continue in his former position as acting professional.



CLIFF SPENCER.

Spencer, who leaves for Philadelphia today to play in the Quaker City Open event, will return later in the week to talk to the golf committee and if certain irregularities can be ironed out he will probably be presented with a new contract and resume his relations with the club that have extended over the past seven years.

Should the lanky, long-hitting member of the P. G. A. decide to stay at the club it will put an end to rumors of his successor, that have included virtually every local golfer of note including Mel Shorey, Leo Walper, Al Houghton, Claude Rippy, Levi Yoder, Roger Peacock and others.

Spencer left his resignation on the desk of club president Brashears last Monday as he left for Shawnee for the Shawnee-on-the-Delaware Open. No reason was given for the act except a general dissatisfaction on both his part and the club members that was never confirmed.

Cliff planned to make the winter tour, starting with the Hershey Open, with the top-notch pros, as an unattached member. He hoped to land a position next spring. Regardless of whether he stays at the club or not he still plans to take in several of the winter tourneys.

The Beaver Dam club, that has been hit by several tough breaks, now boasts a membership of almost 400. Among Spencer's accomplishments are building the ladies' golfing classes from 8 members to nearly 100. He was runner-up for the Middle Atlantic P. G. A. title last year, and finished near the top in the recent True Temper Open. He ranks second only to Wiffy Cox as the city's most colorful professional. MERRELL WHITTLESEY.

Nose Out Cronin's Men, 6 to 5, in 10 Frames; Take Final, 1-0.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, July 18.—The Chicago Whtie Sox took both ends of a double-header from the Boston Red Sox before 30,000 fans today, winning the first game, 6 to 5, in ten innings, and the second, 1 to 0.

Rip Radcliff's single, scoring Zeke Bonura from second base, gave the White Stockings the opener after Boston had tied the game up in the ninth. Bonura scored three runs in that game and had two doubles and two singles.

In the nightcap, Monty Stratton won his twelfth game of the season, holding Boston to three hits. It was the first defeat of the season for Stratton's opponent, Archie McKain, who allowed only five safeties. The lone run was scored in the sixth. Kreevich walked and then scored when Dixie Walker singled and Outfielder Fabian Gaffke fumbled the ball.

Tigers Beat Nats 3 to 1 on Errors

halic singled to center and Rick Ferrell drew a walk before the southpaw could get anybody out. Weaver, though, popped up, attempting to bunt, and the tension was eased. Considerable remained, though, when Wade walked Almada to fill the bases.

At that point the Tiger management got Wade out of there, and Roxie Lawson answered the entreaties of the 2,5000 by whipping a third strike past Ossie Bluege. He brought complete relief to the Tigers by disposing of Kuhel on a grounder to Greenberg.

Six men left on base in two innings was the very ungratifying record of the Nats.

That chance they muffed in the sixth was their last. Against Lawson in the final three innings they got only one man on base—Mihalic, who walked in the eighth. It was sad, sad.

THE BIG SIX.

Ducky Medwick's National League batting lead was swelled to 29 points, and he went farther than ever out in front in baseball's hitting "Big Six" yesterday by getting four hits in eight times at bat, to boost his mark 3 points, to .417. ## Allison Makes a Comeback

formerly a national-ranking tennis player, made a great comeback yesterday to win the Spring Lake tennis tournament with a victory over Ernest Sutter, former intercollegiate net champion.

Spring Lake Net Tourney To Allison

Veteran Wins Over College Star After Shaky First Set.

By the Associated Press.

Sprig Lake, N. J., July 18.—Wilmer L. Allison, the Tumbling Texan, successfully climaxed another comeback, try today by defeating Ernest Sutter, 22-year-old national intercollegiate singles champion, of New Orleans, 1—6, 6—1, 6—4, 6—2, in the final round of the Bathing and Tennis Club invitation tournament.

The 33-year-old veteran, national singles champion in 1935, survived a shaky start in which he dropped the first set to sweep through the next three and gain a leg on the Clifford Hemphill Challenge Bowl, won the past four years by Frankie Parker.

Parker, member of the Davis Cup squad, retired the original Hemphill trophy, and won the first leg on the new bowl last season.

Allison showed no effects of the injuries which forced him to default in the semifinals of doubles play yesterday, when he appeared with a bandaged right arm and a stiff right leg.

Sutter, who eliminatedd J. Gilbert Hall, New York veteran, in the semifinals, was expected to show up well against the injury-saddled Allison, but the Tulane youth failed to cope with the former champion's volleying and made no real stand after running through the opening set.

Allison, improving as the match progressed, indicated he may be an important factor in the annual Longwood Cricket Club tourney, which opens at Chestnut Hill, Mass., tomorrow.

Allison said he would consult a physician tomorrow concerning the bad right arm and right leg which several times tempted him to drop from the singles play.

After an unimpressive start in the first set, the Texan broke through in the fourth game to avert a love triumph for the usually steady Sutter.

Phillies Split Bargain Bill With Pirates

Easterners Take Opener, 5 to 2; Nightcap Goes Eleven Innings.

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, July 18.—A long fly by Woodie Jensen scored Lloyd Waner from third base in the eleventh inning, giving the Pittsburgh Pirates a 6-to-5 win over the Phillies in the second game of their double-header today. The Phils captured the opener, 5 to 2.

Eight thousand fans watched the twin bill.

Claude Passeau, big right-hander, held the Pirates to six hits in the first game. The Phils scored four runs in the first two innings.

Lee Handley and Bill Brubaker smashed homers for the Bucs in the nightcap. The game was a seesaw battle, with the Phils tying the score at 5-all with a run in the eighth inning.

Reds' Rookie Hurlers Beat Bees Twice

Davis and Grissom Allow Boston But 7 Hits in Doubleheader.

Boston, July 18 (AP).—The Cincinnati Reds today took two games from the Boston Bees behind rookie pitchers, 4-1 and 1-0.

Right-hander Ray "Peaches" Davis set the home club down with five hits in the opener and then Lee Grissom, a long, lean left-hander, shut out the Bees on two hits in the nightcap.

The double defeat cost the Bees the series and the services of Catcher Al Lopez for at least two weeks. A foul tip off the bat of Ival Goodman broke the index finger of Lopez' right hand in the first inning of the second game.

In chalking up his ninth win of the season, Grissom pitched hitless ball for seven innings before Gene Moore broke his spell with an infield single in the eighth. The other hit, also a single, was made by pinch-hitter Bobby Reis in the ninth. Both Moore and Reis were stranded on third.

The Reds' run came in the seventh when Virgil Davis singled home "Chick" Hafey who had tripled.

A two-run assault on Frank Gabler in the first inning was enough to clinch the opener for the Reds as Davis was in fine form and received brilliant support in the field from his teammates, especially Alex Kampouris.

Rose Team Beats Gordon Crew to Win City League Title

6,000 Fans See Murphy Tame Foes

Hurler Also Leads Rally to Clinch Contest on Elipse.

By Jack Munhall.

A crowd of some 6,000 fans yesterday thronged the South Ellipse to watch Walter Murphy, big, fireballing ace, toss a beautiful four-hit pitching performance smack in the disgusted faces of a highly favored Gordon Cafeteria nine to lead Rose's Liquor to an easy 11-to-1 victory and the first half championship of the National City Unlimited A League.

The game started, as expected, as a great mound duel between Murphy and Willie Silverman, slight Gordon curve ball star, and for six innings there were no scores as spectacular fielding by both teams choked off runs. Then in the seventh Murphy himself inaugurated a rally which produced two runs that proved more than sufficient. Leading off Walter cracked a neat single to center and after Nau had walked to place men on first and second, Joe Pusitari drove both in with a single to left.

Gordon came back in its half of the seventh to tally once when Durkin singled and later scored. But the game was clinched in the eighth when Silverman weakened and allowed five runs and then in the ninth the aroused Roses shoved over four more to erase any lingering doubts.

Hurls No-Hit Shutout.

Dewey Poole entered the sandlot hall of fame, pitching a no-hit, no-run game for Police 4 Juniors against Stewart's Pharmacy, to win, 4-0. The former Central star allowed only four men the privilege of first base and struck out eight. Not a single runner advanced to third.

The feature of the B unlimited section was the seventh straight pitching victory of young Herbie DeVers, sensational New Deal right-hander, who let the Cardinals down with 10 scattered hits, fanning 9, while his team pounded out an 8-2 decision. His opponent, Wild Bill Payne, hurled effectively but was hurt by his own blunders and weak support. He gave up only 8 hits and fanned 7. Don Fones paced the winner's attack with two hits.

Meanwhile George's Radio juniors maintained their undefeated status and also their position at the top of the league, defeating Nick Bombard, 8-2, behind six-hit hurling by Shorty Alexandria.

Police Boys 4 Juniors kept in step with George's, winning its fourth consecutive game, as Rip Carver granted J. C. Flood seven blows and also led the offensive with three hits.

George Deoude's Midgets rolled merrily along undefeated, scoring ten runs in the first inning to coast to a 10-2 win over Police 11. Batchelder was the winning twirler, allowing but five hits and fanning a like number.

Klein's Tavern Loses.

The Heurich Brewers continued their comeback pull in the A league, upsetting Klein's Tavern, the second-half leaders, 4-0, to take the lead, as Randy Heflin, powerful right-hander, threw four-hit ball and breezed a third one by ten men. Bennie and Schrivener led the assault with a brace of safeties.

In the only other A game scheduled, Anacostia Motors forfeited to the Union Printers when they could not place nine men on the field.

In the B League, White Haven defeated the Joe Tucci Plumbers, formerly known as the D. C. Plumbers, 7-6; Georgetown, displaying a murderous hitting attack, slaughtered H. B. Leary, 19-4, and Read's Pharmacy upset Star Radio, 5-3, behind Bogg.

In the remaining junior circuit game, Wade's Auto beat Police, 10-7, and among the midgets, Police No. 5 swamped their brethren from No. 4, 9-2, as Pitcher Walsh starred, giving four hits while securing three, including a homer and triple himself, and Corr's Bicycle outlasted Hilltop Market, 12-10, in a wild contest, with Bonzzella going all the way to receive credit for the win.

Noble Kizer, Purdue Grid Mentor, Ill

Well-Known Coach Said to Be in 'Serious' Condition.

By the Associated Press.

Lafayette, Ind., July 18.—Noble Kizer, athletic director and head football coach at Purdue University, was rushed to St. Elizabeth's Hospital this afternoon in what was described as "serious" condition.

Kizer, head grid coach since 1930 and athletic director since 1933 at Purdue, has been in failing health for more than two years with a nephritic ailment. His sudden illness was unexpected.

Kizer, lineman on Notre Dame football teams made famous by the "Four Horsemen," was in a semi-conscious condition as he entered the hospital.

He made a tour of the campus last night, inspecting construction work on the new Purdue field house, and returned home complaining of a headache. He became ill shortly after midnight.

Kizer has been connected with the Purdue athletic department since 1926.

Both Wiliams And Steele in Prime Shape

the work of Williams, Walter Woods and Joey Archibald, all of whom are under consideration for high international ranking.

Those representing the N. B. A. will be President Joseph Maloney, of the New Jersey State Athletic Commission; Edward Foster, executive secretary; Frank Hogan, president of the Canadian Boxing Commission; Charles Reynolds, director of the department of athletics, State of Rhode Island; Maj. Harvey L. Miller, secretary District Boxing Commission, and Dan Kelly, chairman of the Massachusetts State Athletic Commission.

Steele and Williams were both quietly confident on the eve of their important bout.

Despite Steele's reluctance to predict a knockout and Williams' insistence that he would take advantage of Steele's "weaknesses" without mention of a knockout, close observers believe the bout will end with one or the other fighter on the floor for the full ten count.

Technical Kays Unlikely.

Neither Steele nor Williams has ever been badly cut up in a fight and it is generally conceded that there is little chance of the referee being forced to halt the action to save either fighter punishment.

Both battlers, however, punch exceptionally hard for their weights. Williams has a splendid left hook, with which he has floored about half of the many opponents over whom he has scored knockouts. His right hand punch is even more dangerous and the contender has more "killer instinct" than any fighter since Dempsey. Once he gets an opponent in trouble he is absolutely merciless until he has battered that foe to the floor.

Williams also is a very rough fighter—one who does not hesitate to throw all the rules out of the ring, especially after he has been stung by a punch.

Bertha Gross, colored, 55, 1219 Sixth street northwest, succumbed in Gallinger Hospital of injuries suffered Friday night when she was knocked down while crossing Fourteenth street at Independence avenue.

Police said the automobile was operated by Robert D. McMasters, 22, 1607 U street southeast, who will appear later at a coroner's inquest.

Hit-and-Run Victim.

Sarah Joppy, colored, 65, of Lincoln Park, Rockville, Md., died at Georgetown Hospital last night, half an hour after she was brought there by the Rockville Rescue Squad. She was struck by a hit-run driver a mile outside Rockville on the Frederick road. Her skull was fractured.

Charlotte, who suffered a crushed chest, was hurried to Casualty Hospital by her father, Charles Harman. She is not expected to live.

Eight persons, five of them colored, were injured yesterday afternoon in a head-on collision on route 5 above T. B., Md. Police believed the driver of one car, William E. Nolan, 715 Shepherd street northwest, had swung wide to pass another car on a curve. Unable to pull back in line, he crashed an oncoming car. Motorists stopped and took the injured to Casualty and Sibley Hospitals.

Struck while playing in an alley back of 1423 East Capitol street, Winfield Kelly, 2, of Brentwood, Md., received laceration of the scalp. He was treated at Casualty Hospital.

Police did not detain Tracy S. Payne, 33, of the East Capitol street address, said to be the driver of the automobile.

James Miles, jr., 18, of Hillside, Md., suffered minor cuts and bruises when the automobile he was riding in overturned about 8 miles outside of North Beach, Md. He was brought here to Gallinger Hospital for treatment. Local police were unable to obtain details of the accident.

Car Hits Light Pole.

Striking a traffic light pole at Twelfth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest, Elmer B. Shaw, 40, 651 B street northeast, suffered lacerations of the face and head and bruises to his legs. He went home after treatment at Emergency Hospital.

Slight cuts and bruises were suffered by a man and his wife in a collision on Highway No. 2 near Floris, Va. Brought to Garfield Hospital, they gave their names as Earl Keyes, 26, and Mattie Keys, 21, both of Herndon, Va. They remained at the hospital.

Joseph Brannon, 19, 824 Eighth street northwest, suffered a broken left leg and cuts when he was struck by a car at Constitution and Virginia avenues northwest. He was taken to Emergency Hospital by Thomas M. Davis, 29, 1734 New Hampshire avenue northwest, driver of the machine that struck him. Police made no arrests.

Two Seriously Hurt.

Two out of nine passengers in one car were seriously injured early yesterday when they ran off the Rockville pike while attempting to pass another car near Halpine, Md. # The Post's Campaign Assures 4 Awnings for Dogs at Pound

Contributions Continue After Anonymous Donor of Two Coverings Offers More Aid; First of Group Going Up Tomorrow.

Four large awnings to protect 65 dogs at the District Pound from rays of the midsummer sun which last week took the lives of two of them have been assured through stories appearing in The Washington Post.

After reading of the deaths, a Washington woman visited the Pound, and returned home by way of an awning company—where she placed an order for two large awning coverings for two of the pens, at a cost of $130.

Since Poundmaster Frank Marks could not accept cash gifts offered him, several persons telephoned to ask if The Post would hold donations until enough had been contributed for purchase of an awning.

The Post consented and in three days received $110.15. In the meantime, the woman who ordered the two awnings—and who wishes to remain an anonymous giver—read of The Post fund and said she would add enough to the amount received to insure two additional awnings which she believed needed.

Saturday, The Post announced its campaign closed, with $103.15 on hand. Yesterday, two more gifts were received—from Mrs. Annie C. Simms and from Miss Pearl S. Dinger.

The total amount will be applied to the two awnings, for which estimates are now being received.

The first two awnings will be put up at the Pound tomorrow and it is hoped all four will be up before the week is ended.

Loeb Demands Jerusalem Be Given to Jews

Rabbi Condemns British Proposal to Partition Palestine.

Most Jews are dissatisfied and bitterly disappointed at the proposal of the British government to partition Palestine and "do not know what is the proper course to pursue at this juncture," Rabbi J. T. Loeb, of the Southeast Jewish Congregation, said yesterday in an address broadcast over radio station WOL.

On one hand, he said, the Jews are confronted with the fact that the meager portion of land granted them is too small for their resettlement needs. On the other hand, they are considering the "prestige, honor and pride" that goes with any home "one may call one's own," he said, adding:

"It is impossible to think of a Jewish Palestine without Jerusalem . . . It is time to call a halt to the disabilities of the Jew and the desolation of the City of Jerusalem. Let the Jews have their homeland and their voice in the council of nations.

"Give Jerusalem to the Jews, and by their energy, industry and thrift Jerusalem will be made the beautiful, populous metropolis it was of yore," he said, declaring that the only real solution to the problem of Palestine is "Palestine for the Jews."

"If partition is deemed absolutely necessary, at least the Jews should be allotted their portion in a manner to be worthy of a Jewish homeland."

Steel Activity Rebounds With Labor Pacts

Operations Rise 8 Points in Week to 82% of Capacity.

With production snapping back promptly after removal of the labor blockade that limited output since late in May, steelmakers give the most positive evidence of belief in continued strength and expectation of renewed buying after the usual summer slackness, says Steel.

In fact, except in bars, strip and some other lines, they find it incumbent to make every effort to give delivery on as much booked tonnage as possible to be in position to meet requirements of consumers when fall buying starts. In sheets and tin plate best efforts to reduce backlogs have not had much effect and reservations by automobile builders for 1938 models are just around the corner, some small lots already having been covered.

Bookings by some leading sellers have been at only 25 to 30 per cent below the June average and considerably better than at this time last year.

Announcement of finished steel and other prices for fourth quarter is expected within a short time and the belief is that prices will be reaffirmed on most products, with minor exceptions.

To market observers who believe scrap prices foretell future conditions the present situation forecasts an active fall and winter. The increase in price last week was general at $1 to $2 per ton, dealers finding difficulty in obtaining sufficient tonnages to meet requirements. The rise is fully as rapid as the decline that started in April.

Full operation in plants made idle by labor interference was felt last week and the national operating rate rose 8 points to 82 per cent of capacity, the best level since interruptions started at the end of May. Resumptions gave Cleveland 32 points rise to 79 per cent; Chicago, 14 points to 84; Youngstown, 2 to 78; Pittsburgh, 21 to 88; Wheeling, 14 to 91. Eastern Pennsylvania rose 3 points, to 68, and Detroit 2 points, to 97. New England showed the only decline, 2 points, to 78. No change was shown by Birmingham at 96 per cent; Cincinnati at 93; St. Louis at 93, and Buffalo at 88.

Second Quarter Profits Rise but Recovery Loses Momentum; Credit Remains Easy.

New York, July 19.—The lighter shadings of a rather dull week in finance were the death of Senator Robinson, the leader in the President's fight for the Supreme Court packing measure; the fresh outbreak of fears for the safety of the French franc; the fighting of the Japanese in China, and finally another demonstration, the $60,000,000 loan to Brazil, of the Government's new policy of lending money to foreign countries in default already on their debts, in the hope of stimulating their merchandise purchases on this side.

With no change in currency and credit beyond the customary reduction in circulation and loans which was expected to follow the mid-year operations and the holiday requirements the bond market was dull. Government issues were barely steady, partly as a setback from the artificial stimulation given by the Treasury last month in preparation for its new issues. Commodity markets acted fairly well and the rise in retail prices continued, largely under the influence of rapidly advancing food prices. Wheat advanced sharply on higher world demand. Cotton also was inclined to strengthen. Other price sections gave signs of returning vigor. Another rise in steel scrap prices, for example, was announced.

Stocks Tire.

Stocks continued the advance begun the previous week, but vigor was lacking. Trading volume fell back to around 750,000 shares daily and in spite of efforts to bull the market, illustrated in the strong rise in United States Steel common shares to the highest price paid since last April, buyers were apathetic. The feeling was hopeful, but speculative enthusiasm was low.

Trade statistics were somewhat mixed by the incidence of the holidays. Railroad freight car loadings last week were down on that account, but they were higher than a year ago. Trade is beginning to pick up in the West under the influence of larger crops and higher prices. Even the Federal authorities (or at least Marriner Eccles, head of the Federal Reserve Board) note the adverse influence of rising wages and other costs on business enterprise, particularly on the building industry, but on the whole no worse than seasonal recession in business seems to have taken place.

Just as our economic problems are complicated by the unknown political factors, so is the French position affected. The cure for the weak franc lies partly in a sound fiscal policy and partly in the return to power of those who can command the confidence of the entire country and of capital. Otherwise the heavy debt maturities of France this autumn may well provoke another crisis for the franc.

Poor Loans.

The Brazilian loan, which is made without security and only with the hope that the Brazilians will some day make enough in foreign trade to repay it, is of doubtful value. As a subsidy for American industry, insofar as Brazil will spend the money here for American goods, it may help our trade, but the effects are likely to be temporary. Taxpayers probably would prefer to see the gold used to reduce the public debt. The worst of it is that, following the Chinese loan, it looks to be a new policy of the Government to make loans to countries that obviously are poor credit risks—loans which come out of the taxpayers' pockets and which may turn out to be simple gifts with little if any compensating trade advantage.

Some idea of how good business was in the second three months of the year, when strikes were so abundant, now can be obtained. The first score of industrial corporations to report show profits in second quarter about 22 per cent higher than those for the same period of last year. In the first six months their profits were 30 per cent above the corresponding period of 1936. It is probable that although business is making further progress this year, in point of volume, the rising costs are cutting into the profit margin. That will be even more apparent in the third quarter. Once sales volume begins to fall the result will be that profits rapidly will melt.

Along a cold stream that flows from the mountain he found under his flashlight spot a large water snake dragging a good-sized trout, the fish still flopping. The following morning he found another trout about the same size, dead, on the bank, believed also to have been caught by the snake but found perhaps too big to handle or deserted through fright.

Lee Boulevard Rezoning Asked By Civic Units

Want New Highway Classed as Residential A for Entire Length.

Civic leaders and community groups from all sections of Arlington County are supporting the campaign of the County Civic Federation to prevent the construction of commercial structures or apartment houses on the last section of the Lee Boulevard near Fort Myer.

Citizens' associations of Glencarlyn, Cherrydale, Lee Heights, Highland Park, East Falls Church and Livingston Heights have adopted resolutions favoring the extension of the residential "A" sections for the entire length of the new highway. Other groups are expected to indorse the movement before the end of the month.

On a section of the Lee boulevard now under construction three of the six pieces of property now are zoned for local business and three for light industry. These are the only sections along the boulevard not zoned residential.

The county board of zoning appeals will hold a hearing July 28 on rezoning these six pieces of property to residential "A".

Many of the citizens groups have recessed for the summer and can take no action on the question before the hearing. Heads of eight of the organizations have expressed the opinion that their groups favor similar resolutions as adopted by the six citizens' associations.

Julian B. Simpson, secretary of the Arlington County Civic Federation, has stated "we are convinced that the great majority of the residents of Arlington County want this new modern road leading into Washington from the West to be kept on a plane with the historic area which it serves. The county board, which will meet July 30 to act on the recommendation of the zoning appeals board, can do a great service to the present and future generations of Arlington County and to the millions of motorists and visitors who will use the route annually."

The newly appointed planning commission for Arlington County will hold its first conference at 5 p. m. today in the office of County Manager Frank C. Hanrahan in the courthouse. Morton L. Wallerstein, chairman of the State planning commission, will discus organization plans.

Members of the county commission are Christopher B. Garnett, Basil M. DeLashmutt, Judson Reamy, Gabriel C. Harman and County Manager Hanrahan ex officio member.

Relief Wages Thrice Virginia Teachers' Pay

Salaries Compared With Bricklayers' in New Bulletin.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., July 18.—The third bulletin of the public relations committee of the Virginia Education Association asserted today that bricklayers in Richmond working under the Emergency Relief Administration in 1935 received wages three times greater than the salaries paid the average school teacher in the Virginia State school system.

The bulletin stated that the average salary of Virginia's teachers in 1935 was $779, while the ERA bricklayers were paid wages of $50 per 40-hour week, or $2,500 for a 50-week year. The average wages pai othe rskilled workers, including painters, carpenters, plumbers and electricians, was $1,758.71, according to figures based on statistics from the U. S. Office of Education.

Virginia has established high standards of training for teachers, but salaries have lagged far behind, the bulletin said. In 1926 the average salary for Virginia teachers was $772 and in 1936 it was $740.

The report said the Cather-Layman act passed by the General Assembly in 1934 was intended to provide sufficient funds from State sources to guarantee a minimum average salary of $720 in each school division. The funds in the State treasury in 1934 would not permit appropriation of this total and the act was modified.

"This amount appropriated by the State," the report said, "is not sufficient to retain in the teaching profession those teachers who are the most desirable character and mentalities needed for the teaching of our children."

The windows of the car were barricaded with seat cushions as it rushed away from the crowd.

Home Erected in 1744 Sold to Detroit Man

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Charlottesville, Va., July 18.—Heirs of the estate of the late M. K. Copps have sold the historic home, Ednam, located on the Jefferson highway, 2 miles west of the University of Virginia, to John L. Dryden, of Detroit, Mich.

Decision Today May Determine Montgomery Boys Club's Fate

Maryland-National Capital Planning Commission Expected to Act on Request for Use of Somerset Park Building.

Advocates of the proposal to form a boys' club in the Bethesda-Chevy Chase area said last night a decision on their request for use of the building in the Somerset Park area as a clubhouse is expected to be made public today by the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

The fate of the organization they seek to form apparently hinges upon the decision, for proponents of the plan maintain there are no other suitable quarters for the club available in the vicinity of Bethesda and Chevy Chase.

Civic leaders began the club movement more than a year ago as a result of the success of the Metropolitan Police Boys Clubs in Washington, but action on the clubhouse request was deferred by park officials until the latter acquired title to the new park in Somerset.

Approximately 1,500 boys in Bethesda, Chevy Chase and neighboring communities would be eligible for membership in the club. Plans call for a complete modernization of the building if permission is obtained for its use.

Specifications for the structure were submitted to the committee by school executives, who plan to advertise for bids on the school next month. The building will contain seven classrooms, a gymnasium, cafeteria, showers and locker rooms and will be constructed of a new type of glass building block.

"I was in my shirt sleeves and I didn't have the necessary equipment with me, so I just grabbed a pair of common scissors and performed the operation in about five minutes." # Laundry Labor Ballots Today On Bargaining

400 to Decide If Union Can Negotiate for 11 Cleaning Staffs.

Washington's first "consent Election," held under provision of the Wagner act, will be run off today from 7 a. m. to 7 p. m. to determine whether Laundry Workers, Cleaners and Union Local 187 can bargain for employes of 11 wholesale cleaning plants, affected by the recent strike in the industry here.

More than 400 employes are expected to file ballots at the booth which was to be set up in the Garnett Patterson High School, Seventh and U streets northwest. A representative from the National Labor Relations Board, sent by the regional director at Baltimore, will supervise the voting, while employer and employe representatives from each plant will be present as watchers.

Basis of voting will be the payroll lists effective June 8, 1937, prior to the beginning of the strike. Employers in each plant have agreed to bargain collectively with the union if it polls a majority of the ballots, according to officials of the NLRB.

Mrs. Lucille Ezekiel, chairman of the investigating committee for the League of Women Shoppers, consumer's organization which supported the union during the strike, said last night members of her organization would be present throughout the election.
